'Govt Can't Force Us To Sell Mutton On Low Rates'

INTERVIEW

Auqib Javed

Despite a local trade body suggesting a way out in its "fact-finding report", the mutton deadlock is refusing to end in the valley, even as butchers have been directed to open their shops within two days or face action.

However, as a counter move, the butchers have sent legal notice to the concerned authorities, questioning which law permits them to seize the closed shops.

Terming the official stand rigid, the mutton dealers of Kashmir say the ball is in government's court as "they have to listen to our grievances as well". "We have already lost over Rs 400 Cr in last 4 months and we don't know when this deadlock will end," the Mutton Dealers Association Kashmir (MDAK) said.

In an interview with Kashmir Observer, Khazir Mohammad Riggo, President MDAK, said his tribe is ready to negotiate with terms and conditions.

Why the crisis about the rates suddenly?

The rate for the meat was fixed in the year 2016 at Rs 400 per kilogram. The rates have to be revised every year. But when the government failed to do so, mutton traders raised the rates on their own.

However, four months ago, the Divisional Commissioner, Kashmir, revised the rates and fixed it at Rs480per kilogram from Rs600.

This was unacceptable to us, as we wouldn't be able to earn anything out of it.

So we have decided not to sell the meat till the rates are fixed as per our demands.

What are your demands?

See, the government and people as well, have to understand the expenses we have to bear for bringing the livestock from the other states. We have travel expenses, slaughtering expenses, commercial tap water charges, labour expenses, shop rents, etc.

Then we have to pay animal protection NGOs at Madavpur in Punjab. They charge usRs10,000 per truck under the guise of torturing animals.

Its pity that such a huge business is in mess. The traders and the drivers who bring livestock from outside Mandis to Kashmir face mental torture from different agencies. Since nothing is organized, we are in loss.

The government has to look into our problems and try to address them, rather than forcing the rates upon us.

But the government maintains that the current rate is justified by a scientific report
