Govt Bans 118 More Mobile Apps

New Delhi- The government on Wednesday blocked 118 more mobile applications, including popular gaming app PUBG, terming them prejudicial to the sovereignty, integrity and defence of the nation. The banned apps include Baidu, Baidu Express Edition, Tencent Watchlist, FaceU, WeChat Reading and Tencent Weiyun, besides PUBG Mobile and PUBG Mobile Lite, according to an official statement. All these banned apps have Chinese links, sources said. The Centre had earlier banned a number of Chinese apps, including Tik Tok and UC Browser. Release Mourners, Stop Which-Hunt: ASS

Budgam: Anjum Sharie Shiyan Wednesday castigated authorities for detaining Shia mourners and booking them under Unlawful Activities Act. The spokesperson of the organization said that the brute force applied on the mourners has no justification in today's world. He said mourners were not only beaten up, but slapped with frivolous charges, while dozens are lying in the hospitals for the injuries inflicted on them by police. The spokesperson said that Anjum Sharie will provide all legal aid to those who have been arrested for taking part in Muharram processions. • P-02

Urdu's 131-Year Reign In Kashmir Ends

Kashmiri, Dogri, Hindi Added As Official Languages In J&K

Observer News Service

NEW DELHI: In a significant move the Union cabinet on Wednesday announced that Jammu and Kashmir will now have five official languages, ending Urdu's 131-year reign as the only official language of the ethnically diverse and politically fraught region.

As of now, the official language of Jammu and Kashmir is Urdu and Kashmiri is recognised as a regional language.

Announcing the decision at a news briefing, Union Minister Prakash Javadekar said the Jammu and Kashmir Official Languages Bill, 2020 will be introduced in Parliament in the upcoming Monsoon Session.

"Union Cabinet has approved the introduction in Parliament the Jammu & Kashmir Official Languages Bill 2020 in which 5 languages Urdu, Kashmiri, Dogri, Hindi & English will be official languages," Union Minister Prakash Javadekar told reporters.

This, he said, has been done based on public demand. Javadekar didn't share more details about the bill.

The Bill received the Cabinet nod on Wednesday at a meeting presided by Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

The bill is expected to be tabled in Parliament during the coming session. The Monsoon session of Parliament is slated to begin from September 14.

Union Minister Jitendra Singh said the government has accepted the long pending demand of the region for the inclusion of Dogri, Hindi and Kashmiri as official languages in J-K.

New Official Languages Will Ensure Ease Of Governance: Jitendra

NEW DELHI: Union Minister Jitendra Singh Wednesday said the Cabinet's approval to a bill that adds Kashmiri, Dogri and Hindi as official languages in Jammu and Kashmir will end the grievances of discrimination on the basis of language.

The Union Cabinet on Wednesday approved the bill under which Kashmiri, Dogri and Hindi, apart from the existing Urdu and English, will be the official languages in Jammu and Kashmir. It was an anomaly that the three languages -- Dogri, Hindi and Kashmiri -- which are spoken by nearly 70 per cent of the population of Jammu and Kashmir were not approved for use in official business.

'Outdated Agenda Item' India Calls For Removing J&K Issue From UN

LAST MONTH, AS INDIA MARKED THE first anniversary of ending the special status to Jammu and Kashmir, Beijing again called for a discussion on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir in the Security Council under "Any Other Business".

United Nations: India at the UN has called for permanently removing the issue of Jammu and Kashmir under the "outdated agenda item" of the "India-Pakistan question" from the Security Council's agenda, saying such "irrational exuberance" has no takers in a dignified world.

UN Security Council

In a veiled attack on Pakistan, India said that there is a delegation that repeatedly attempts to rebrand itself as contributing to international peace, but unfortunately fails to recognise that it is globally known for being the fountainhead of international terror and the hub for terror syndicates.

During a virtual informal meeting of the plenary on the annual report of the Security Council, Pakistan's UN envoy Munir Akram had raked up the issue of Jammu and Kashmir and said that the Security Council has also been found lacking in implementing its own resolutions and decisions on the situation in Jammu and Kashmir.

He added that the Council has met thrice during the last one year to consider the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. ▶▶PAGE 02

HC: Let JeI Chief Watch' Daughter's Marriage Online

Rejects Wife's Plea To Allow Him Attend Ceremony After Govt's Statement

SRINAGAR: Jammu and Kashmir High Court on Wednesday rejected an application by the wife of Jama'at-e-Islami J&K chief Abdul Hameed Ganaie, seeking his release on parole to attend the marriage ceremony of their daughter on September 3.

However, a bench of Justice Tashi Rabstan directed jail authorities in Kathua, where he is lodged under Public Safety Act since August 5 last year, that arrangements be made for him to watch the marriage ceremony of his daughter on September 3 "through virtual mode."

The court's rejection of the application followed government's opposition against the release.

In FOCUS 'Bumpy Ride' In Viral Times 'Writing-Off' JEE-NEET Exams In Kashmir

Swati Joshi

IT'S a "bumpy ride" for teenager Basit Bashir to reach his examination centre, 70 kilometres away from his hometown Kulgam, in Srinagar's Rajbagh area.

Starting early morning journey from restive south Kashmir region—dotted with military installations, patrolling parties and checkpoints—is nothing short of a highway horror for him and his student tribe, he says. "One cannot rely on public transport for such a crucial drive," Basit says. "And being a Kashmiri student appearing for exams, we've to be always ready for the times ahead of us."

Like thousands of the lockdown-weary students, this Joint Entrance Exam (JEE) and National Eligibility cum Entrance Test (NEET) aspirant has been pleading hard for the postponement of the exams for long now.

But despite the protest by some students and opposition parties, the JEE Main exam for admission to engineering colleges started on Tuesday.

As a precautionary measure, temperature of the students was checked before allowing them enter for the examination center.

JEE and NEET exams have been postponed twice because of the CO-VID-19 pandemic. While JEE Main was scheduled from April 7 to April 11 and then from July 18 to July 23, NEET was scheduled for May 3 and then for July 26.

Currently, JEE and NEET are scheduled from September 1 to 6 and September 13 respectively.

As on September 1, Jammu and Kashmir had reported 7980 active Covid cases with 703 deaths. The Valley was trying to come out of a political lockdown since last August following abrogation of Article 370, before the pandemic hit and curtailed its education calendar.

The Internet which plays a significant role in the preparation of competitive exams was reduced to 2G in Kashmir. "The concept which I can understand within half an hour from videos take around 2-3 hours with a slow internet connection," Basit says.

"Being anxious, I'm not able to focus like earlier," the aspirant continues. "In the current scenario the exams should be postponed."

Netizens, especially students, have also thrown their weight behind the JEE-NEET aspirants by trending hashtags like #ManKiNahiStudentsKiBaat, #StudentsDislikePMModi, #PostponeJEEandNEET.

Despite the fact that the JEE is already being conducted, Zullkar Nain, a NEET aspirant from An-antnag, feels the exams should've been postponed.

On being asked about his preparation for the exam, he says, "Kashmir is unable to access 4G internet from last one year. So, obviously, my preparation isn't par with the rest of students all over India."

Students recently showed their rage against the exam decision by massively disliking Prime Minister Narendra Modi's 'Man Ki Baat'.

The recent episode of the radio program received 986k dislikes. Amid raging reactions, Subramanian Swamy, a Rajya Sabha member, objected New Delhi's decision to conduct JEE and NEET.

In one of his tweets, Swamy said that he would try to talk to the Prime Minister and ▶▶PAGE 02

LoC Trade: NIA, IT Deptt Conduct Raids In Srinagar, Kupwara

SRINAGAR: The NIA and sleuths of Income Tax Department assisted by police and CRPF carried out searches at multiple locations in Srinagar and Kupwara against some businessmen in connection with now suspended cross-LoC trade.

The purpose of the raid was not immediately known, however, sources said that raids were conducted with regard to 'militant funding' case.

Teams of the National Investigation Agency, along with state police and paramilitary forces, swooped on the locations this morning to gather evidence, the officials said.

Official sources said that raids were conducted in Mandar Bagh and Batmaloo areas of Srinagar while a raid on the shop and house of an LoC trader was also conducted in Kandi Khas area of North Kashmir's Kupwara district. In Srinagar raids were conducted in the houses of Ghulam

Ahmad Dar, Ishfaq Ahmad Dar and Muhammad Ayoub Matta at Danderkha Batmaloo and Mushtaq Ahmad Khan at Mandar Bagh Srinagar.

Police sources said that those who were raided are affiliated with LoC trade. The son of Mushtaq Ahmed Khan is doing MBBS in Pakistan administered Kashmir from past two years.

In Kandi Khas area of Kupwara, the shop and the house of one Ghulam Rasool Magray were raided. Magray was also involved in LoC trade but his family said that he disassociated from the trade last year and now he is running a provisional store. An official claimed that incriminating material has been seized from his shop and the house.

Pertinently, last year NIA and Income Tax team had raided the house of Tanveer Wani, president of Cross-Line of Control (LoC) Traders' Association's in South Kashmir's Pulwama.

The NIA had earlier said in a statement that large scale transfer of funds from Pakistan to India has been taking place via the cross-LoC trade mechanism.

LoC trade is in suspension mode since the abrogation of special status of Jammu and Kashmir. (KNT)

Body Of Youth Exhumed For Autopsy Month After Burial

BUDGAM: After Budgam Administration permitted the exhumation of the body of a youth who died in the first week of August last month, a team led by Naib Tehsildar in presence of police exhumed the body amid protest in Surisyar Chadoor area of Central Kashmir's Budgam district.

Pertinently, on 5 August last month, a youth namely Sajad Ahmad Dar son of Muhammad Sidiq Dar of Surasyar area of Chadura died at his home after playing cricket whole day with his friends. He was buried at his native graveyard in Surasyar. After his death, family doubted that his friends might have forced him to consume some drugs and that might have resulted in his death.

To ascertain the cause of his death, they wanted the body to be exhumed so that a post-mortem could be conducted on it.

The family had approached District Development Commissioner Budgam with a request to exhume the body. They in an application had stated that they have strong suspicion over his two friends, one is a driver who hails from Sursyar and another is from Gund Chadoor.

Sources said that in order to ascertain the cause of death, the District Development Commissioner had granted permission and today a team of doctors along with forensic experts in presence of civil and police administration exhumed the body.

The body was taken to PHC Chadoor where medical team and FSL teams conducted post mortem.

Sources said that the relatives and family members of the deceased youth staged a protest when the exhumation process was in progress. The protesters blocked Kralpora-Chadoor road and accused police of inaction. They demanded immediate arrest of the accused. Police and civil administration officials rushed to spot and pacify the protesters assuring them action will be initiated only after the outcome of the post mortem report.

Sustainability: Coconut And Palm Oil Industries At Loggerheads Over Environmental Impact

Agencies

A report highlighting the harmful environmental impact of coconut oil production by a researcher with links to the palm oil industry has sparked a heated debate over coveted green credentials in the multibillion dollar industries.

The palm oil industry has received international negative attention, including consumer boycotts, in recent years for clearing biodiversity-rich tropical rainforests in Southeast Asia in its production process.

Coconut oil, conversely, has been increasing in popularity as a healthy superfood with fewer cultivation concerns.

But a study published in respected scientific journal 'Current Biology' in July appeared to upend that dichotomy, highlighting the impact on native animal species because of coconut oil production deforestation.

The paper said that coconut cultivation threatens 18.6 species per million tonnes of oil produced, nearly five times more than its palm cousin.

The coconut industry, however, was more interested in the lead author of the report, Erik Meijaard, who has carried out work for the global palm oil sustainability body and an Indonesian palm company. Meijaard continues to head the oil palm task force of the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN).

"In the coconut community, [Meijaard's] article was initially not taken seriously," Indonesian Coconut Processing Industry Association (HIPKI) secretary-general Donatus Gede Sabon told Reuters. "However, they clearly intend to sneak in a negative campaign against coconuts."

Indonesia is heavily invested in both industries - it is the world's biggest grower of palm oil, followed by Malaysia, and is also the world's second biggest coconut producer, after the Philippines.

Both products are found in everything from cookies to soap, but palm is more widely used as it is cheaper and more versatile. Global sales for palm oil were about $43 billion last year, with coconut oil sales lagging at around $2.72 billion, according to Reuters' estimates.

"Production of both crops is destructive when it originates from the wrong areas, such as forests, peatland and high conservation value areas," said Chandra Panjiwibowo, Rainforest Alliance Indonesia Country Director. "For now, there is much more palm than coconut cultivated globally, and its production is growing much faster, so palm undoubtedly has more impact."

Urdu's 131-Year Reign In...

August 5 last year," he told reporters.

On August 5 last year New Delhi scrapped the semi-autonomous status of Jammu and Kashmir and divided it into two union territories. Urdu in India is largely associated with Muslims and the Hindu rightwing has for long been pushing Hindi as a national language, a move resisted by several states.

In the undivided Jammu and Kashmir state, various ethnicities spoke Kashmiri, Pahari, Gojri, Ladakhi, Dogri, Balti and Punjabi as their mother tongues. Urdu and Hindi had become a means for inter-community communication. In 1889, Maharaja Pratap Singh, the third ruler of the Hindu Dogra dynasty, replaced Persian with Urdu as the court language.

The latest decision is seen here by many as part of policy aimed at dismantling everything that can be associated with the special status of Jammu and Kashmir, like separate flag and constitution.

New Official Languages Will...

the Minister of State for Personnel said.

He said this will remove the feeling of alienation among different communities and address the grievances of discrimination on the basis of language.

The minister said the government has accepted the long-pending demand of the region for the inclusion of Dogri, Hindi and Kashmiri as official languages in J-K.

"It is not only a fulfilment of a long-pending public demand of the region but also in keeping with the spirit of equality which was ushered in after August 5 last year (when provisions of Article 370 were repealed)," said Singh, who is also the Lok Sabha member from J-K's Udhampur constituency.

Addressing a press briefing, Information and Broadcasting Minister Prakash Javadekar said the Jammu and Kashmir Official Languages Bill, 2020 will be introduced in the upcoming Monsoon Session of Parliament.

outcome". Sources said India has achieved tactical gains in eastern Ladakh in the last few days by occupying a number of strategically important hill tops and locations.

On Monday, the Indian Army said the Chinese military carried out "provocative military movements" to "unilaterally" change the status quo on the southern bank of Pangong lake on the intervening night of August 29 and 30 but the attempt was thwarted by the Indian troops. External Affairs Ministry Spokesperson Anurag Srivastava on Tuesday said the Chinese PLA was engaged in "provocative action" again on Monday when the ground commanders of the two sides were holding talks to ease the situation following China's attempt to change the status quo in the Pangong lake area two days back.

"The situation in the area remained sensitive," said a source.

The two sides were earlier engaged in a confrontation on the northern bank of Pangong lake but it was for the first time such an incident occurred on its southern bank, they said.

Defence Minister Rajnath Singh on Tuesday carried out a comprehensive review of the situation in eastern Ladakh at a high-level meeting attended by External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar, National Security Advisor Ajit Doval, Chief of Defence Staff Gen Bipin Rawat, Army Chief Gen MM Naravane and Air Chief Marshal RKS Bhadauria.

It was decided at the nearly two-hour meeting that the Indian Army will continue to maintain its aggressive posturing in all sensitive areas along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) to effectively deal with any Chinese "misadventure", the sources said.

They said the Indian Army has further bolstered its presence around the Southern Bank area of Pangong lake by deploying additional troops and bringing in more weaponry including tanks and anti-tank guided missiles.

A battalion of the Special Frontier Force was also deployed in the area. The sources said the Indian Air Force (IAF) has also been told to enhance its surveillance on increasing Chinese air activities along the LAC in eastern Ladakh.

There have been reports that China has deployed J-20 long-range fighter jets and several other key assets in strategically located Hotan airbase which is around 310 kms from eastern Ladakh.

In the last three months, the IAF deployed almost all its frontline fighter jets like Sukhoi 30 MKI, Jaguar and Mirage 2000 aircraft in the key frontier air bases in eastern Ladakh and elsewhere along the LAC.

The fresh attempt by China to change the status quo in the Pangong lake area is the first major incident in the area after the Galwan Valley clashes on June 15 in which 20 Indian Army personnel were killed. China also suffered casualties but is yet to make the details public. According to an American intelligence report it was 35.

India and China have held several rounds of military and diplomatic talks in the last two-and-a-half months but no significant headway has been made for a resolution to the border row in eastern Ladakh.

people would like to know as to who constituted the crucial remaining 1% of the beneficiaries?

He said the JK Administration has explained further that these certificates have been issued for jobs only. It means that UT the administration has no objection for giving the Domicile Certificates to non-state subjects also!

"Since the UT Administration has issued the Domicile Certificates to such a big number in hot haste, the process must have involved the recklessness of sorts", senior Congress leader said in his statement. The statement added that the perception of the people is that the UT Administration is a stopgap arrangement and that the Centre should not have amended the Domicile Law in the absence of public support. He urged upon JK UT Administration to issue a 'white paper' indicating particulars of those who are not state subjects, yet they got the certificates! That procedure alone can allay the fears of the people of the state, reads the statement.

India Calls For Removing J&K...

summary statement by the Secretary-General of "matters of which the Security Council is seized" listed 'The India-Pakistan question' among those items that have not been considered by the Council at a "formal meeting" during the period from January 1, 2017 to August 1, 2020. The agenda item 'India-Pakistan question' was first taken up by the Council at a formal meeting on January 6, 1948 and was last considered on November 5, 1965.

Pakistan, backed by its 'all-weather ally' China, has been repeatedly seeking to have a discussion on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir in the Security Council.

The Council had held closed consultations on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir on August 16 last year after China asked for the "closed consultations" to discuss the matter. That meeting had ended without any outcome.

In January this year, China, on behalf of Pakistan, had again made an attempt to raise the Kashmir issue under "other matters" during closed consultations in the Security Council Consultations Room. Then too, China stood alone in the Pakistani corner to get the Security Council to focus on the Kashmir issue.

Last month, as India marked the first anniversary of ending the special status to Jammu and Kashmir and its bifurcation into two union territories - Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh, Beijing again called for a discussion on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir in the Security Council under "Any Other Business".

All these meetings ended without any outcome, as many other members of the Security Council have underlined that Jammu and Kashmir is a bilateral matter between India and Pakistan.

India's Permanent Representative to the UN Ambassador T S Tirumurti had told PTI that contrary to what Pakistan may claim, Islamabad has not been successful in trying to put Jammu and Kashmir on the UN agenda.

"Frankly, the attempt by Pakistan to try and internationalise, what is a bilateral issue, is nothing new," he had said.

Tirumurti had pointed out that contrary to what the Foreign Minister of Pakistan Shah Mehmood Qureshi asserted, "there has been no formal meeting of the Security Council on the India-Pakistan issue even once for the past 55 years, let alone three times!"

Pakistan, backed by China, has only been able to bring up the issue of Jammu and Kashmir informally and in closed door meetings under what is called "Any Other Business", a category where literally any item can be brought for discussion by anyone. These meetings have no records and there is no outcome.

Mr Tirumurti had pointed out that even UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres, in his statement last August, clearly referred to the 1972 bilateral Simla Agreement.

postpone the exams beyond Deepawali.

Likewise, Mir Mohammad Fayaz, a Rajya Sabha member from Jammu and Kashmir, has also written to the Education Minister, Dr. Ramesh Pokhriyal Nishank, to postpone the exams, so that "health and lives of lakhs of students from across the country is prevented from being in danger". But then, not everyone is supporting the motion.

Shakir Mantoo, an aspirant, feels that if proper Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) are followed in the JEE and NEET exams, they should not be postponed.

Mantoo was enrolled in a coaching institute in Aligarh, and unlike other students in Kashmir, he's not struggling for study material.

"Further postponement of the exams will affect my continuity and I wish to be done with the paper as soon as possible," Mantoo says.

Inash Rashid, a NEET aspirant from Anantnag, seconds Mantoo's views. "The postponement of the exam has already caused anxiety among students, some are even depressed," says the anxious student.

"If the exams are further postponed, we will lose one year."

of India, defence of India, security of state and public order," it said.

It said the IT Ministry had received complaints from various sources, including several reports about misuse of some mobile apps available on Android and iOS platforms for stealing and surreptitiously transmitting users' data to servers outside India.

"The compilation of these data, its mining and profiling by elements hostile to national security and defence of India, which ultimately impinges upon the sovereignty and integrity of India, is a matter of very deep and immediate concern which requires emergency measures," the statement said.

Release Mourners, Stop...

"Both civil and police administration failed to implement the 'model' that we had proposed to them to contain Covid-19 infection. Instead, they used brute force and dealt ruthlessly with the mourners," he said adding that property too was damaged by police during Muharram processions.

"A large number of mourners have been arrested from Zadibal, Bemina, Budgam and other areas and their relatives who wait outside different police stations are being humiliated."

"Anjuman Shari demands the immediate release of these mourners and urges police and civil administration to stop witch-hunting," the statement concludes.

Info Dept says prompt in payments

SRINAGAR: The Information Department has contested news regarding withholding of payments to the newspapers claiming that the bills of advertisement payments are being cleared from time to time.

Joint Directorate of Information and Public Relations has clarified that in Kashmir division alone, an amount of Rs 8.61 crore has been disbursed to newspapers including national dailies during the prevailing COVID-19 pandemic and phase-wise lockdown. The department has cleared previous year's liability and has asked newspaper organizations to furnish bills to the department for further payment. The department in a statement said that DIPR has made adequate funds available to both its divisional offices for making payment to newspapers and publications on account of their advertisement bills and an amount of Rs 11 crore each has already been released to Kashmir and Jammu divisions during the current financial year up to ending August 2020.

The bills received by the department are being verified and reconciled and it is expected that payments would be released to the newspapers within one week, reads the statement.

India launching global media blitz on Kashmir

WASHINGTON: India is launching what has been described as "a global-scale media blitz" against Pakistan projecting the Indian interpretation of the 'reality' in Kashmir.

The multi-pronged campaign launched through print, electronic and cyberspace media in some 20 languages will coincide with the UN's millennium session. The idea is to embarrass Pakistan during General Musharraf's visit to New York and to help Indian PM Vajpayee plead India's case.

Full-page colour advertisements are being sought to be published in leading publications like The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Los Angeles Times, USA Today, The Wall Street Journal, The Chicago Tribune, The Times (London), The Straits Times (Singapore), The Bangkok Post, The Jerusalem Post, The Japan Times, The Sunday Times (London), The International Herald Tribune, the Economist, Time, Newsweek, The Financial Times and BusinessWeek, says a report in rediff, an online newspaper. It claims that 1 funds for the campaign are being raised from Indians the world over through contributions.

However, a multi-million dollar campaign at this level cannot be launched without the support of the India government, say observers.

The campaign is likely to accelerate the ongoing India-Pakistan conflict to feverish heights, extending it to cyber warfare. The advertisements will project the theme 'jehad' for Pakistan, agony for India' and portray 'peace-loving' India's patience even in the face increasing casualties on its side in J&K, says report.

Also in the pipeline are advertisements in French, German, Swedish, Italian, Dutch, Portuguese, Spanish) Finnish/Turkish, Malay, Bahasa Indonesia, Russian, Chinese, Japanese, Bengali, Korean, Norwegian/Thai, Sinhalese and Arabic. The report says this will be complemented with campaigns in cyberspace via an exclusive Web site, agonyofindia.com & e-mails.

The full-page advertisements quote the utterances of Pakistan's Chief Executive General Pervez Musharraf to prove Pakistan's involvement in Kashmir militancy.

Reportedly, The financial Times has expressed reservations about publishing the advertisement. It is claimed that leading ad agencies have been hired in New York and other major cities of the world to handle the latest campaign in multiple languages. (Kashmir Observer, September 03, 2000)

Being a Muslim woman in Kashmir

In the Valley, womanhood is still attached to ideals that uphold a patriarchal order

It is a truth universally acknowledged that domesticity is hardly a marker of a woman's identity in today's world. But one mustn't dare to use obsolete hierarchical binaries between a womanhood that is restricted to the private sphere and dismiss it in favour of the public one. This is especially true for women in Kashmir, who tread the thread between the two very precariously albeit with grace.

Many discussions, especially local, often use the word "conservative" to describe Kashmiri society. It is bold of us to use this world to chastise ourselves. Not that there isn't any truth to it but in a world where the west exercises hegemony to delineate what is progressive and what is not; we run the risk of stereotyping our own ways of life. This is especially true of us in the age of global islamophobia.

However, in a bid to protect our authentic ways of being, we must not legitimise problems within our communities and shy away from reform. In Kashmir, womanhood is still attached to ideals that uphold a patriarchal order. This impulse is sustained through a problematic use of religion and through an insistence on traditional values that do not pass the test of rights.

Our ideas about women are still deeply problematic. We tend to put women on a pedestal when asked about the "status of women" in our society. This is far removed from how the same society views women. They're defined in a sense that they cannot define themselves. Our society has labels that still adhere to castigating women who do not fit its model of an ideal womanhood. How then can we claim to have "let" our women exercise agency?

As muslim women, modesty is an integral part of our belief systems. However, this ideal has also been used to shame women who do not adhere to it or do not adhere to someone else's definition of it. In the context of religion, women in Kashmir are given a certificate of excellence if they exercise this and only this aspect of their religion. Women who struggle with it are hardly given a benefit of doubt. They're ousted from the sacred circles of self-styled citizens of heaven; increasing their sense of alienation.

However, it is an absolute need of the hour for us to regurgitate and reassess our ideas. This is not because one has to do away with one's religious beliefs but because there's a need to have an unproblematic understanding of it. For instance, our ideas of religion are largely tainted by biases that are not islamic but south asian. Islam was chided by the Arabs when it was brought to them by our beloved Prophet because they thought it was too "progressive". Shift the scene to our social milieu and you'd find this impulse missing. This isn't because non-muslim models of womanhood are better but because our understanding of religion has been a casualty of traditions that it had set out to correct.

Womanhood as defined by Islam needs no amendments. Infact, it is us who need to have the critical awareness to avoid maligning religious principles to oppress someone. It is only with a clear, just and unproblematic knowledge of religion that we can truly preserve our ways of being and our belief systems.

Muslim scholars in the west have already started teaching religion through the prism of social justice as they observed that in a world which offers desirable alternatives which seem better off in their commitment to rights; religion ran the risk of being abandoned.

In Kashmir, given the political situation, the need to reach out with the right understanding of religion is direr. In the presence of narratives that justify violence against people; we cannot afford to be callous with an understanding or an articulation of our beliefs. In simple words, we cannot afford to mess up. This is most true in the case of our perceptions about women and their roles.

Historically, upper class western feminist movements have been criticised for their part to play in propagating racism and rationalising colonialism. This was because they held the power to define acceptable models of womanhood that were not intersectional. In India, this has been the case with upper caste feminists who are also defining "ideal" and "progressive" models of womanhood and demonising others like Dalits, tribals and muslims. In the existence of discourses that delegitimise and colonise, we do not have the liberty to make mistakes.

However, as Kashmiris, we do not have a reason to despair as well. Women in Kashmir have always been stakeholders in the cause of our economic, political and social progress. Working women are not an unusual scene here and it has never been that way. Here, women exercise their agency in both public and private spheres.

Hijab clad women are not indocinated by the progressive liberals would have us believe.

Muslim women in Kashmir cannot be characterised into categories that are borrowed from other South Asian cultures. For instance, the use of the word "pardah" and "ghoonghat" are used interchangeably by progressive liberal groups to criticize these practices. This is done without historicising the merits of such criticism. Pardha and hijab have evolved in meaning in the 21st Century. Even as they must remain in essence, a submission to God; they are now a challenge to the onslaught of hypersexualising commodity culture and western modernity as well.

Ideas of progress, liberation and freedom are being redefined by muslimworldlover and Kashmiri women occupy the frontlines by example. Those of us who identify as muslims are reasserting our rights to practice our beliefs without being shamed for them. We're also subverting the hierarchies that place some women over others. More and more, we're also recognising that a woman's role in the domestic sphere is as appreciable as her role in the public working sphere and vice versa. We're also pushing back the forces within our cultures that try to dictate us.

As a society, we must now encourage forces of reform and justice that are already playing out in our everyday lives. It is also required that we understand problems of women in Kashmir while being sensitive to a matrix of their identities. This implies the need to be sensitive to differences of region, religion, sexuality, class and caste. There's a vacuum that can only be filled with collaboration and not confrontation.

Faltering fight

With daily positive cases crossing 80,000, India is on course to become the world's new Coronavirus capital. The total number of cases have already gone past 36 lakh and the number of deaths is over 60,000. At this rate of growth, India is soon going to overtake Brazil and subsequently even the US. India is already ahead of Mexico in terms of Covid-19 deaths worldwide. The virus has only just made inroads into the vast countryside after overrunning the major cities. And if it does take root in the villages, it will wreak havoc and start a second wave of infection in the country. Already, unlike Brazil and the US, India has yet to witness any reduction in the number of daily cases.

At the same time, if we compare the size of population of India with that of Brazil and the US, then the record growth of India's cases is still not a reason for alarm. India's population is almost thrice the combined population of Brazil and the US and much more densely scattered. But India can hardly afford to let the contagion spread as it can lead to skyrocketing of the number of cases. And this, in turn, can overwhelm the already depleted economy.

As per provisional estimates released by Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation on Monday India's Gross Domestic Product for the April-June quarter slipped by a sharp 23.9 per cent, owing to a strict nationwide lockdown due to the novel coronavirus. Last year, the GDP had expanded by 5.2 per cent in the comparable quarter.

The government can thus hardly afford to go for yet another lockdown. At the same time, it can't afford to let its guard down as far as the strict implementation of the measures to prevent the Covid-19 from spreading deeper into the society. It is a tightrope walk for the government. It has far fewer options as far as enforcing strict measures to arrest the spread of Covid-19. And it has also little fiscal space to pump more money into the economy to help resuscitate it. So, it is unlikely that the economy will get back on track anytime soon.

This means that the lakhs of jobs that have been lost will not be created in near future. For that to happen, the economy will have to kickstart again. And this, in turn, will not be possible on a sustainable basis until the vaccine is developed. This would mean probably a wait of three to six more months. Government will need to display some ingenuity to keep the number of new Covid-19 cases at a manageable level. And what's more important, ensure that the economy is not halted further.

Women in Kashmir are given a certificate of excellence if they exercise this and only this aspect of their religion. Women who struggle with it are hardly given a benefit of doubt. They're ousted from the sacred circles of self-styled citizens of heaven

Studying dinosaurs

It could be said that we live in the age of the dinosaurs. It is, of course, 66m years since a great extinction wiped out three-quarters of the animals on Earth, including non-avian dinosaurs. The first fossil was described in scientific literature around two centuries ago, and Richard Owen coined the term dinosaur, or terrible lizard, soon afterwards. The scientific "dinosaur renaissance" of the 60s renewed public interest.

But in the last 25 years, the pace of palaeontological discoveries has accelerated to dizzying speed. Over the last five years, a new dinosaur has been identified every week on average - including, this month, a theropod from the Isle of Wight, already nicknamed Dinosaur Island thanks to the haul of treasures from its shores. Though the bulk of the new species come from China, Mongolia, Argentina and the US, the new theropod - Vectaerovenatorinopinatus, or "unexpected air-filled hunter" - demonstrates that striking finds are being made all over the world. They range from crow-sized creatures to giants more than 30 metres long.

While skeletal remains grab public attention, traces of footprints (like the 170m-year-old stegosaur tracks on the Isle of Skye that were documented this spring) and even coprolites - fossilised dinosaur dung - are shedding light on how creatures lived and interacted. New technologies are as essential as the unearthing of new specimens. Cat scanning has allowed palaeontologists to see inside skulls. The fast-evolving field of paleocolour is giving us a much better idea of how dinosaurs looked.

discoveries are intrinsically fascinating. But they are also transforming our understanding of what these creatures were. The very term dinosaur has become a slur describing someone out-of-date, irrelevant and unable to adapt. In his book The Rise and Fall of the Dinosaurs, the palaeontologist Prof Stephen Brusatte recalls being taught, as a child, that these were "big, scaly, stupid brutes so ill-equipped for their environment that they just lumbered around, biding their time, waiting to go extinct... These stereotypes are absurdly wrong

The work of the last two-and-a-half decades - from the discoveries of feathered dinosaurs in China - suggests that these animals were smarter, more diverse, more interesting and important than we realised. They thrived for 150m years; modern humans are closer in time to T rex and triceratops than those creatures were to the stegosaur. They are the ancestors of animals including birds, our modern day dinosaurs. Prof Brusatte suggests we might take a humble interest in their ability to survive and adapt through dramatic climate and environmental change.

They seem, perhaps, especially appealing now. The pandemic has left us in what feels like an endless present; our lives feel suddenly smaller. Dinosaur discoveries are an inspiring glimpse of the broadest temporal horizons, allowing us to contemplate the rich, complex and ever-changing nature of life on Earth.

Online classes: A challenge and an opportunity

The Government has instructed all schools to conduct online classes. During these sessions, the teachers are connecting with the students remotely and giving lectures and providing study material by using technological aids like Microsoft Teams, Zoom app, YouTube tutorials and WhatsApp broadcasts.

The online classes had started in the first week of April 2020. These virtual classes are being held structurally by following a proper time table which is presided by the school administration.

I want to share the experience of online classes as the concept is new for students living in J&K in particular to those areas that still don't have internet access.

Poor Connectivity and Resource Crunch

First and foremost difficulty in online classes is that not every student has got a mobile phone or a tab or in other words they simply cannot afford such education.

Second the Internet connectivity here is not such that the desired objectives are achieved in time. It costs a day on 2G where it would cost only an hour on 4G.

The internet in J&K is the most vulnerable. As per the recent study, the majority of internet shutdowns come from the erstwhile state of J&K. This is the biggest problem as of now students have to face. As the internet remains suspended for security issues or any other reasons for days to weeks to months to sometimes even for a year. Given the situation it is hard to cope up with the same. For some students, the convenience of online courses can encourage poor study habits. Without a set class schedule, as students would have in a traditional course, the temptation to procrastinate may be stronger. With no in-person interactions with the instructor or with fellow students, it can be easy to forget assignments and deadlines unless the student keeps organized. Online courses often require just as much work as traditional college classes, so putting off coursework can leave students struggling when important deadlines approach. This really results in mental harassment to a student.

Online classes are a nightmare for primary students as well. It is the worst experience for them. The lack of in person face-to-face interaction has affected the proper understanding of facts for them. They sometimes don't even know what they are writing, yet they are compelled to do so in order to complete the syllabus and the burden their teachers face.

Challenge for teachers

Online classes are not less than a challenge for the teachers itself. As it is not an easy job to compile the material and prepare hours long video lectures and then post them without proper internet speed. Often they have to go through disruptions due to some technical issues like application malfunction, slow internet or no internet at all. The applications or software that are being used by teachers to deliver online classes are not fully safe. Even the administration itself has to provide guidelines for safe usage of some apps that caused privacy issues during their usage. This adds to the problems that every teacher experienced and they ultimately have to look for some other alternatives.

Are kids actually learning through this mode?

For children to really get benefited by these classes' concentration and parental support is essential. Online teaching is an arduous task. We need to appreciate a teacher's role as well. They are trying their best to make children understand but then there are pros and cons of everything. To shift learning from offline to online mode wasn't an overnight task. Our valley has been under 2 consecutive lockdowns, the education sector has suffered the most. But luckily this time internet services are working. Our children have been out of schools for about 400 days so they are already lagging behind. For them to cope up with other states our valley schools also introduced online classes. We need to consider both pro's and con's of online education. Firstly, something is better than nothing. A parent can't afford to risk his child's life by allowing him to join offline classes. So in that case it's better a child learns something at home. It's easily accessible. They remain in touch with their syllabus and don't lose their 'student' identity. They still have a routine they need to follow and be available for their online classes and response to the asked queries. But there are still many parents who don't have smart phones for their children and can't afford it either. Their children are not able to grab this opportunity of learning online in this pandemic. They lag behind further, these are mostly children from backgrounds who anyway need a head-start because of lack of resources.

The Temptation of Disbelief

"The greatest question of our time is not communism versus individualism; not Europe versus America; not even the East versus West. It is whether men can live without God."

Will Durant

Sheikh Shahid

Is there some supernatural intelligent design at work or are we left in lurch in a godless pit? Perhaps, the thought of the supernatural and its denunciation is as old as thought itself.

Our evening tete-a-tete turned into a solemn conversation when a friend remarked, "I am waiting for someone to return from his grave and set me free"; in response to my question - "Are you sure there is no God?"

The terse conversation makes manifest the ambivalence and the curiosity of humans befuddled with the question of God. Is there some supernatural intelligent design at work or are we left in lurch in a godless pit? Perhaps, the thought of the supernatural and its denunciation is as old as thought itself. But historians of ideas trace the origins of disbelief from the 6th century BC Ionian or Milesian philosophers like Thales, Anaximander and Anaximenes of Miletus - one of the Ancient Greek colonies on the coast of Asia Minor. They are called physical philosophers as they rejected everything else which was beyond the natural and tangible confines of this universe. Their ideas led them to ask some of the big questions that confront human mind, like the ultimate origin of this world and two centuries down the time's lane their ideas ended up in the atomistic theories of Leucippus and Democritus. These Milesian philosophers' iconoclastic worldview was in sharp contradiction to the traditional mythological writers like Homer. They are believed to be the first to have rejected the mythological explanations and instead put their weight behind the naturalistic worldview. If earlier, the workings of this world were explained by the nitty-gritties of mythology, the Ionian philosophers believed that the world was a self-sufficient system working in accordance with the laws intelligible enough for the human mind. No longer was the unrequited love the undoing of Aphrodite, no longer did a man act recklessly because Athene willed it, and no longer did Zeus take away anyone's wits. Many centuries later, this naturalistic view would echo in the words of Richard Dawkins, in his book - The God Delusion, where he describes an atheist as someone who "believes there is nothing beyond the natural, physical world".

This pre-Socratic period could be said to have commenced the scientific outlook, though not in the current experimental sense. However, this radical turn of thought did not replace mythology by science only, rather it was replaced with a rational explanation in general. For instance, Herodotus' History is populated with mythology so that the gaps are plugged while Thucydides wrote perceptible history dotted with facts or in Bernard Williams' words, the history of Thucydides aimed at "telling the truth" plainly. So, we could argue that what supersedes myth is rationality. So that there is only room for reason, evidence and opinions which are wide open to rational scrutiny. Therefore, the naturalism of Milesian philosophers stems from rationalism which in turn is the fundamental basis of Atheism.

Through the Islamic Lens
The Islamic word for Atheism is Ilhaad, which literally means "deviation". The word Ilhaad is derived from an Arabic root word lahad, which is used to describe the grave where a trench is dug straight into the ground and then a side pocket is carved for the deceased. The side pocket marks a deviation from the main trench. So, in this sense Atheism is considered a deviation from the natural or straight path. From the Islamic perspective, Atheism could be said to have emerged from the 8th century Dahriyymovement, who were empiricist thinkers believing that only through empirical means could knowledge be acquired. They reasoned that everything in this universe always existed as it is, hence there is no need for the inclusion of a creator. Faraj al-Isfahani in his book Kitab al-Afghani mentions Abu Hanifa, the famous Islamic jurist and the founder of one of the Islamic schools of thought, who debated many Dahriya in the 8th century and intellectually confronted their claims. There were many other Islamic scholars like Al-Ghazali, Ibn al-Jawzi, Muhammad Shabab, Abu Isa al-Warraqa, Ibn Qutayba, who responded to the Dahriyya claims of disbelief. In his book - Kimiyai Sa'adat (The Alchemy of Happiness), Al-Ghazali has described Dahriyya as reductionists bereft of any holistic understanding of the universe and its purpose. He compares them with ants on a piece of paper that cannot lift their eyes from the ink and thus fail to see the writer who holds the pen.

National Geographic, September 1999, Kashmir: Trapped in Conflict

Beginning of Avowed Atheism
Historians agree that the first use of the term Atheism could be traced down to the Greek scholar John Cheke in his translation of Plutarch's - On Superstition. However, many historians are of the opinion that the avowed atheism did not emerge up until late in the 18th century. David Berman, in his book - A History of Atheism in Britain, writes that the first avowedly atheist work is Baron d'Holbach's The System of Nature published in 1770 and first such writing - Dr. Priestley's Letter to a Philosophical Unbeliever was published in Britain in 1782, the authorship of which is still disputed. James Thrower in his book Western Atheism - A short History also unambiguously states that while some works of Democritus and Lucretius are atheistic, D'Holbach was the 'first unequivocally professed atheist in the Western Tradition'. Hamza Andreas Tzortzis has mentioned the 17th century Polish thinker Kazimierz Lyszczyński as having denied the existence of God in his De non existenti deo wherein he writes that God is a creation of man and that humans created the concept of God to oppress others. Similarly, in 1674, Matthias Knutzen produced such atheistic writings and in 1700s Atheism saw the emergence of the intellectual promulgation in the likes of David Hume and Voltaire. Voltaire claimed deism accepting the existence of a creator while rejecting the revelation or word of God. For Hume, the idea of an omnipotent God was incomprehensible given all the suffering and evil in this world. The question of suffering and evil has led many generations of thinkers to ponder and question the existence of God. Professor Bernard Schweizer, after scrutinizing a number of literary works of some prominent writers like Zora Neale Hurston, Peter Shaffer, Philip Pullman, Elie Wiesel, Charles Swinburn, Rebecca West et al. comes to a conclusion that there is one common thread running throughout these profound works - that all of them seem to be struggling with the idea of a merciful god in a world full of suffering. He says that the Misotheist (one who hates God) is psychologically troubled and it is 'quite true that the psychologically, emotionally, and physically wounded are most likely to turn away from God'. Another avowed proponent of atheism was the 19th century member of British parliament - Charles Bradlaugh who fought for atheism to be acceptable for society. In his essay - Humanity's Gain from Unbelief he defends atheism and charges society of bearing prejudices against atheists and those who are falsely suspected of atheism.

The Four Horsemen
The currents of atheism were flowing subtly underneath without too many people heeding to the rhetoric of its proponents. And suddenly 9/11 happened and the fear and anger it created culminated in the prolonged War on Terror occupying the US and its allies in a protracted war in Iraq and Afghanistan. Most importantly, it provided a renewed impetus to the emergence of a political manifestation of atheism. To describe this new brand of atheism, Gary Wolf, in 2006, while writing a column for Wired, a British magazine, hit on a catchy slogan - New Atheism. Its protagonists were a group of three men who had attracted tremendous media attraction with their bestsellers. Sam Harris with his book The End of Faith (2004), Richard Dawkins with The God Delusion (2006), and Daniel Dennett with Breaking the Spell (2006). And in 2007, the movement secured a new hero when Christopher Hitchens published his book God is Not Great. All these books are first and foremost fueled with raging anger against religion and very much sustained by the events of 9/11.

"The New Atheist will not let us off the hook simply because we are not doctrinaire believers. They condemn not just belief in God but respect for belief in God. Religion is not only wrong; it's evil," wrote Garry Wolf.

And precisely four days after the 9/11 attack, Dawkins wrote an article in The Guardian in which he mounts a scathing criticism on Religion writing:

"To fill a world with religion, or religions of the Abrahamic kind, is like littering the streets with loaded guns. Do not be surprised if they are used."

It is certainly true that the Four Horsemen, named in reference to the biblical image of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Revelation 6.1-8), seen as a portent of the end times, sufficiently capitalized on the events of 9/11 and suddenly everyone was talking about religion and their writings gained a new relevance. God was thought to be vanishing from this world, never to come back from eternity. The Economist, in their millennium issue, had even wrote an obituary of God. But soon afterwards felt a genuine need for a volte-face in their 2007 issue - In God's Name, writing that The Economist was "so confident of the Almighty's demise that we published His obituary in our millennium issue". This is reminiscent of the moment when Time magazine, in their 1980 issue, announced God's comeback by writing:

"God? Wasn't he chased out of heaven by Marx, banished to the unconscious by Freud, and announced by Nietzsche to be deceased? Did not Darwin drive him out of the empirical world? Well, not entirely. In a quiet revolution in thought and argument that hardly anyone could have foreseen only two decades ago, God is making a comeback."

Temptation of disbelief in Kashmir
While writing about any kind of dissociation from religion in the valley, it's important to note that there is a lack of comprehensive survey in this domain. Also, given the conservative religious society, there is almost no history of avowed atheism. Therefore, the writer has sought responses from different people with different backgrounds and varied beliefs to see where Kashmir stands on the issue of disbelief.

Mohd Yusuf, a self-professed atheist, after completing his masters in Urdu, gained a keen interest in religious philosophy and he started reading from an eclectic trove of writings. It has been twenty years now, since he and his small circle of friends started sifting through the esoteric works of philosophy. He says that over a period of 10 years they met the highly educated people in universities and colleges, doctors and other professionals and found that out of these 20 to 25 percent were those who openly dissociated themselves from any religion. His further opines that about 10-15 percent of overall population in the valley might be irreligious and it could be more as most people fear to express their disbelief. The reason, he states, is the highly orthodox society and the intolerant clerics who issue fatwas on the slightest of suspicion.

Assistant Professor of comparative religion at the Central University of Kashmir, Dr. Nazir Ahmad Zargar, is of different opinion. He wrote in response to me:

"I think atheism is newly born in Kashmir as a fruit of modern western education. Religious contradictions caused by pseudo street preachers, plethora of baseless opinions, posts, lectures on social media, unreal tussle between religion and reason, random reading, moral degradation, being religious meaning backward, and above all materialistic education system and jumping to conclusions without knowledge, are some of the reasons for getting astray"

Saqib Ahmad, who did his masters in Philosophy from Aligarh University, commented that according to his own experience, atheism or skepticism is a growing trend among young generation who have uncensored access to the internet. Sajad Ahmad, assistant Professor of Mathematics and an autodidact in philosophy of religion, is also of the opinion that many young people, especially in humanities discipline, are getting liberalized with an unconventional outlook towards religion.

These are all free conjectures drawn from personal experiences of some curious persons. However, the exact figure is unknown for want of a substantial survey. Whatever the cause, belief and disbelief would play simultaneously till eternity. As Christopher Hitchens himself acknowledged in his book, though ruefully, that religion is "ineradicable".

To Move Forward In Life, Learn To Give Back

Shilpa Bhasin Mehra

In social psychology, reciprocity is a social rule that says people ought to repay, in kind, what another person has provided for them; that is, people give back (reciprocate) the kind of treatment they have received from another. By virtue of the rule of reciprocity, people are obligated to repay favours, gifts, invitations, etc. in the future. If someone receives a gift for their birthday, a reciprocal expectation may influence them to do the same on the gift-giver's birthday. This sense of future obligation associated with reciprocity makes it possible to build continuing relationships and exchanges. Reciprocal actions of this nature are important to social psychology as they can help explain the maintenance of social norms.

The importance of reciprocal relationships

While most of us would agree on the importance of reciprocal relationships, we don't consciously think about this idea of reciprocity when it comes to friendships and long-term relationships. Reciprocity is a mutual exchange of actions, goods, energy, time, emotion, etc. between two people. Reciprocity is similar to a game of tennis or ping pong. There's a rhythm or a flow of a back and forth exchange. When someone reciprocates our efforts, it can leave us feeling validated in our choices and friendship, energised to keep going in this friendship or relationship and give more, and leaves us with this overall sense that we are valued and appreciated. Meaningful friendships and relationships require investment, and reciprocity can be the gauge of whether or not the investment is worth it. Reciprocity cannot be measured in all relationships, for example a parent/child relationship. There is nothing reciprocal about being a parent. You love your child unconditionally often expecting and receiving nothing in return. Assessing reciprocity is not about 'tit for tat', it is about taking an honest look at the dynamics in your relationships and assessing the investment on each side.

Your time is valuable, and so is what you bring to your relationships. It's okay to be selective in how and who you spend your time with. Who is worth your time? Who is worth investing in? Not every relationship will be worth it, and not every relationship is meant to last forever. Certain relationships are meant to fill a specific purpose and time in your life.

We all need people in our life who contribute to our growth in some way. Whether it's simply by being support in a time of need, or someone who challenges us to expand our way of thinking, regardless of what it is, it's important and healthy to have people around you that help you thrive and grow. When we allow people in who do not add to our life in any way, or simply take without giving back, we are susceptible to stagnation, burnout, or even a poor sense of self. To really take inventory of the quality of your relationships with the goal of eliminating any non-reciprocal or toxic relations, means we value ourselves enough to believe we deserve better, we deserve to be treated the way we treat others.

Reciprocity is a central concept in much of international relations, particularly international law. The idea that states should respond to one another in kind is deeply ingrained in how we think about international politics, on topics from the use of force to trade liberalisation. Empirical work has shown broad patterns of reciprocity in state interactions. Agreements to cooperate are generally believed to be enforced by threats of reciprocal retaliation against defections from the agreement. International institutions, including international law, are believed to aid in reciprocal enforcement in a variety of ways.

In a wider sense, for years we have used, misused, abused and exploited our natural resources. And now that we are seeing the hazards of it, be it in the form of global warming or deforestation, there is an urgency to make things right. There is a panic to undo the harm we have caused. We have to reciprocate for all of nature's bounty bestowed on us for centuries. That is the law of nature. Nothing is meant to be a one way street. So well said by Oprah Winfrey- Life is a reciprocal exchange. To move forward, you have to give back.

Type 2 Diabetes Could Be Prevented Or Reversed By Lowering Bmi: Study

Aine Fo / Independent

Body mass index is a much more powerful risk factor for type 2 diabetes than genetics, a new study of almost half a million people has suggested. Most cases of the disease could either be prevented or reversed if someone's BMI was kept below their personal cut-off point at which abnormal blood sugar levels are triggered, an expert behind the study said. Everyone will have a different threshold which sees them at risk of becoming diabetic, explaining why some people with a healthy weight develop the condition and some who are overweight do not, the Cambridge University professor said. Professor Brian Ference said the findings of the study could have "significant implications" for the approach to screening for, preventing, treating and even reversing the condition. The study of 445,765 participants of the UK Biobank saw people divided into five groups according to genetic risk of diabetes and five groups according to BMI. Participants, just over half of whom were women, had an average age of 57 and were followed up until an average age of 65. During that period 31,298 of them developed type 2 diabetes. Those in the highest BMI group had an 11-fold increased risk of diabetes compared to the lowest

BMI group, researchers said, and a greater likelihood of developing diabetes than all other BMI groups, regardless of genetic risk.

Investigators also discovered that the length of time a person had a higher BMI did not have an impact on the risk of diabetes. Professor Ference said: "This suggests that when people cross a certain BMI threshold, their chances of diabetes go up and stay at that same high-risk level regardless of how long they are overweight." Explaining further the significance of the study, he said: "You can prevent most cases of diabetes by keeping BMI below a person's threshold. "But it (the study) also implies something that we haven't focused on in the past and that is we can also probably reverse most cases of diabetes if we lower somebody's BMI aggressively below their BMI threshold relatively soon after they develop diabetes. "I think the fact that BMI appears to have a threshold rather than a cumulative effect on the risk of diabetes really has potentially significant implications for how we think about changing screening, preventing, treating and reversing diabetes." He said work is ongoing to be able to allow researchers to estimate what someone's threshold is and that he hoped for a breakthrough on that by the end of this year or early next year. The findings, presented at the European Society of Cardiology Congress, highlight the need to regularly measure BMI and track blood sugar levels of people at high risk, the British Heart Foundation said. Professor Jeremy Pearson, the organisation's associate medical director, said: "This important study of nearly half a million people shows that BMI is a more vital risk factor for type 2 diabetes than we previously realised. When someone's BMI goes above their personal threshold, blood sugar levels increase, triggering the onset of type 2 diabetes, which can lead to damaged blood vessels and increased risk of developing heart and circulatory diseases. "If you are overweight, making small, long-term changes to your lifestyle such as reducing portion sizes and being more physically active can help lower your BMI, which is good for your heart and blood vessels."

Kids With No Covid Symptoms May Shed Virus For Weeks

Agencies

New research suggests that children can shed SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes Covid-19, even if they never develop symptoms or for long after symptoms have cleared. The study, published in the journal JAMA Pediatrics, provides important insight on the role children might play in the spread of Covid-19 as communities continue to develop public health strategies to reign in this disease. The study that sparked this commentary focused on 91 pediatric patients followed at 22 hospitals throughout South Korea. "Unlike in the American health system, those who test positive for Covid-19 in South Korea stay at the hospital until they clear their infections even if they aren't symptomatic," said study researcher Roberta L. DeBiasi from Children's National Hospital in the US. The patients here were identified for testing through contact tracing or developing symptoms. About 22 per cent never developed symptoms, 20 per cent were initially asymptomatic but developed symptoms later, and 58 per cent were symptomatic at their initial test. Over the course of the study, the hospitals where these children stayed continued to test them every three days on average, providing a picture of how long viral shedding continues over time. The study's findings show that the duration of symptoms varied widely, from three days to nearly three weeks. There was also a significant study in how long children continued to shed virus and could be potentially infectious. While the virus was detectable for an average of about two-and-a-half weeks in the entire group, a significant portion of the children—about a fifth of the asymptomatic patients and about half of the symptomatic ones—were still shedding virus at the three-week mark. The researchers wrote that the study makes several important points that add to the knowledge base about Covid-19 in children. One of these is a large number of asymptomatic patients—about a fifth of the group followed in this study. Another is that children, a group widely thought to develop a mostly mild disease that quickly passes, can retain symptoms for weeks. A third and important point, they said, is the duration of viral shedding. Even asymptomatic children continued to shed virus for a long time after initial testing, making them potential key vectors. Recently, a study published in The BMJ journal, revealed that children and young people have less severe Covid-19 than adults and death is exceptionally rare. Earlier, another research published this month in the Journal of Pediatrics, found that children play a larger role in the community spread of the Covid-19.

Study Reveals Women With Higher Neuroticism Are Less Physically Active

Agencies

Personality traits help to understand why some people are physically active and others are not. A new study shows that the role of personality may vary depending on how physical activity is measured. The study led by researchers from the Gerontology Research Center and the Faculty of Sport and Health Sciences at the University of Jyväskylä, Finland, was published in the journal BMC Geriatrics. Personality traits reflect people's characteristic patterns of thinking, feeling and behaving. A study at the University of Jyväskylä focused on two traits: extraversion and neuroticism. Individuals who score high in extraversion are typically social, active and talkative. High scores in neuroticism indicate a tendency to have negative feelings, such as anxiety and self-pity. The results showed that high extraversion and low neuroticism were linked to higher leisure-time physical activity in middle-aged women. Women who scored high in extraversion reported more physical activity, but this was not seen in the physical activity measured by an activity monitor. Women who scored high in neuroticism reported less physical activity and had less physical activity captured by activity monitors. "Even though both methods assess the frequency, duration and intensity of physical activity, they measure partly different aspects of physical activity," explains postdoctoral researcher Tiia Kekalainen from the Gerontology Research Center. "Activity monitors are better at capturing all daily stepping activities whereas self-reporting better accounts for all types of physical activities. Therefore, it is natural that results are partly different between different physical activity measures. It is important to use both ways to assess physical activity behaviour." Personality traits may explain individual tendencies to estimate one's own physical activity level. Personality may explain the way individuals assess their own level of physical activity. The results showed that older adults scoring high in neuroticism reported less physical activity than what was measured by accelerometers.

Mike Pompeo Hopeful China's Confucius Institutes In US Shut By Year-End

Washington: US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said on Tuesday he was hopeful that Chinese Confucius Institute cultural centers on US university campuses would all be shut down by the end of the year.

"I think everyone's coming to see the risk associated with them," Pompeo told Lou Dobbs on the Fox Business Network, accusing the Chinese-government funded institutes of working to recruit "spies and collaborators" at US colleges. "I think these institutions can see that, and I'm hopeful we will get them all closed out before the end of this year."

Last month, Pompeo labeled the center that manages the Confucius Institutes in the United States "an entity advancing Beijing's global propaganda and malign influence" and required it to register as a foreign mission.

David Stilwell, the top US diplomat for East Asia, said at the time that the dozens of Confucius Institutes on US campuses were not being kicked out, but US universities should take a "hard look" at what they were doing on campus.

Pompeo was asked about a warning last month by the Chinese government's top diplomat, Wang Yi, about the need to avoid a new Cold War, an apparent reference to escalating tensions between China and the United States.

Pompeo said "the Cold War analogy has some relevance," but the challenges with China were different.

"This is different from the Cold War in that we are challenged by a country with 1.4 billion people," he said.

"The challenges are different, they are economic challenges."

Pompeo referred to actions the Trump administration has taken to restrict the activities of Chinese firms like Huawei Technologies Co and said further moves could be expected.

"And now you'll see a broader effort, they'll be announcements, I think, in the coming days and weeks we will see the United States confront this in a very serious way, all for the benefit of the American economy," he said.

PIA sacks 74 more employees for fake degrees and other malpractices

Press Trust Of India

Islamabad: Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) has sacked 74 more employees for having fake degrees, engaging in drug smuggling and for poor performance, according to a media report.

Of the 74 employees sacked by the national carrier last month, 27 were dismissed for fake degrees, 31 for unauthorised measures, six for not following rules, four for damaging property, one for involvement in drug trafficking and three for stealing government records, PIA officials told the Express Tribune newspaper. Another two employees were removed for 'illegal activities'.

Apart from the sacked personnel, four employees were demoted, and 11 others were penalised for various disciplinary issues, the report said.

Now, the number of employees sacked in the airline in the last three months stands at 177, according to the report.

The PIA has taken up a so-called 'cleaning up' exercise of its staff following Aviation Minister Ghulam Sarwar Khan's probe report into the May 22 Karachi plane crash.

The domestic flight from Lahore to Karachi crashed in a residential area near the Jinnah International Airport in Karachi.

The aviation minister's probe report blamed the pilots and the air traffic control for the tragedy that killed 97 people. The report called for wholesale changes in the operations of the airline. PTI

Saudi Arabia Opens Airspace to Israeli Flights for First Time

Agencies

Riyadh: Saudi Arabia announced Wednesday that it would allow any flights going to and from the United Arab Emirates to fly over its territory, a move that would give Israel access to some of the kingdom's airspace for the first time.

The announcement, made at the request of the United Arab Emirates, came days after the first direct flight from Israel to the emirates — a symbolic move as the two nations begin normalizing relations.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel, in a video statement delivered while standing in front of a map of the region, called the announcement a "tremendous breakthrough."

"Flights will be cheaper and shorter, and it will lead to robust tourism and develop our economy," Mr. Netanyahu said, while tracing the route between Tel Aviv and Abu Dhabi with his finger on the map. He also said the route would allow Israelis to save time and money when traveling east to Asia.

"These are the benefits of a peace that is genuine," he said.

The flight from Tel Aviv to Abu Dhabi on Monday passed through Saudi airspace, the first time the kingdom had explicitly allowed an Israeli commercial jet to pass over its territory. Air India had earlier received approval to fly directly to Israel, and in 2018 established a direct route from New Delhi to Tel Aviv that passed over the kingdom.

Saudi Arabia's decision to officially allow flights to and from Israel from the United Arab Emirates makes the route more commercially viable, cutting a nearly seven-hour journey in half.

Monday's flight was the latest sign of growing diplomatic and commercial ties between Israel and the United Arab Emirates that some hope will lead to similar moves in other Arab nations that have long refused to recognize the Jewish state. A landmark agreement came after six weeks of indirect talks between Israel and the emirates, with Jared Kushner, President Trump's son-in-law and senior adviser, playing a central role.

The two nations announced the accord last month after decades of stalemate. The United Arab Emirates is only the third Arab nation to establish diplomatic relations with Israel. Egypt signed a peace agreement with the country in 1979, and Jordan signed a treaty in 1994.

Mr. Netanyahu thanked Mr. Kushner and Mohammed bin Zayed, the crown prince of the emirate of Abu Dhabi, for the "important contribution" toward opening up the airspace, adding that there would "be a great deal more good news to come."

The Saudi announcement in the country's official press agency refers to allowing "all flights" to pass through its airspace, but makes no direct reference to Iran or Qatar, two nations currently banned from flying over the kingdom.

Israel-UAE spy base on Socotra targets Iran, China, Pakistan

Agencies

ANKARA: The creation of an Israeli-Emirati intelligence-gathering base in the Yemeni island of Socotra aims at monitoring Iran, China and Pakistan, according to political and strategic experts.

JForum, the official site of the French-speaking Jewish community in Paris, revealed earlier that the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Israel are working to establish a spy base in Socotra.

"This Israeli-Emirati spy base aims at monitoring the Iranian activities in the Gulf of Aden and curbing Tehran's relationship with Houthi rebels," Ibrahim Fraihat, a professor of international conflict resolution at the Doha Institute for Graduate Studies, told Anadolu Agency.

Socotra overlooks the strategic Bab al-Mandab Strait, a main shipping route that connects the Red Sea to the Gulf of Aden and Arabian Sea.

The UAE has deployed hundreds of troops on the strategic island since May 2018, leading to a rift with the Yemeni government, which rejects the deployment.

"The creation of this base is an additional indicator that the Emirati-Israeli deal was meant for forging a solid alliance between the two countries, not just normalizing relations," Fraihat said.

On Aug. 13, the UAE and Israel announced a US-brokered agreement to normalize their relations, including opening embassies in each other's territory.

The Palestinian Authority and resistance factions have denounced the UAE-Israel deal, saying it does not serve the Palestinian cause and ignores the rights of Palestinians.

Fraihat believes that the Israeli-Emirati spy base will also help keep China's economic activities under scanner.

"This base can provide critical security services to the US regarding the Chinese economic activity, especially its trade with Europe," he said, citing US President Donald Trump's tense relationship with Beijing.

"Trump is engaged in a trade war with China and needs to monitor the Chinese commercial activities," he added.

Iran already surrounded Sayed Mohammad Marandi, a political analyst and professor at Tehran University, said Iran is already surrounded by many US military bases in the region.

"Israel has no capability to attack Iran even if they have a joint military base with UAE in Yemen," he told Anadolu Agency.

Marandi argues that the Iranians are happy to see that bilateral relations between the UAE and Israel have become public after years of "secret cooperation".

Macron Refuses to Condemn Charlie Hebdo Insulting Cartoons

US study to track impact of COVID-19 among pregnant women in India, 6 other countries

Press Trust Of India

Washington: A top American scientific body has launched study to track the prevalence and impact of COVID-19 in-

er National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD).

At delivery, women enrolled in the study will receive fection among approximately 16,000 pregnant women in seven countries, including India.

The study will follow women through pregnancy and 12 months after childbirth to compare maternal, fetal and newborn outcomes of participants who have been infected with the virus to those of pregnant women who have not been infected, the National Institute of Health (NIH) said, announcing the launch of the study on Tuesday.

The participating countries are India, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Kenya, Zambia, Democratic Republic of Congo and Guatemala, it said.

The study will be conducted by the Global Network for Women's and Children's Health Research, a group of clinical sites funded by the NIH's Eunice Kennedy Shriver National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD).

At delivery, women enrolled in the study will receive an antibody test to determine if they have been exposed to SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, the NIH said in a statement.

Researchers hope to determine if infection increases the risk of complications such as preterm birth, fetal growth restriction, stillbirth, newborn death and birth defects. They also hope to assess participants' knowledge and attitudes of COVID-19 during pregnancy, including safety, protective practices and prenatal care. Women in the study will also be invited to participate in a follow-up analysis to determine if maternal SARS-CoV-2 infection influences infant outcomes such as cerebral palsy, developmental delays and hearing and vision abnormalities, the NIH said. Japan Carries Out First Successful Test Flight Of "Flying Car"

Tokyo: It might seem like a flight of fancy, but a Japanese firm says it is one step closer to making flying cars a reality after testing a drone-like prototype.

Video from engineering company SkyDrive shows its manned compact vehicle using eight propellers to hover into the air and make its way - with a few wobbles - around a test field.

But while the clip may excite fans of "Blade Runner" and "Back to the Future", the test run leaves mankind far from a future of airborne vehicles whizzing into the sky to avoid traffic.

The company hailed "the first public demonstration of a flying car in Japan" and said the aircraft, around the size of two parked cars, had circled the testing field for four minutes.

"We want to realise a society where flying cars are an accessible and convenient means of transportation in the skies," SkyDrive CEO Tomohiro Fukuzawa said in a statement Friday.

The firm said it wanted the vehicle to be available to buy in Japan by 2023, with reports suggesting it could cost upwards of $300,000.

The car is not the first step humans have taken towards a brave new world of airborne vehicles. A German company tested a flying taxi in Singapore in October, saying it hoped its invention - also shaped like a big drone - would revolutionise travel in traffic-choked cities.

Volocopter had already tested its battery-operated, two-seater taxi elsewhere around the globe but the Singapore trial was the first in the heart of a city.

New book 'Melania and Me' feeds speculations about First Lady

A new book released Tuesday dishes on the supposed icy relationship between Melania Trump and her stepdaughter Ivanka, fuel for gossips eager to speculate about first family rivalries.

Author Stephanie Winston Wolkoff says she was once a friend of the president's third wife, also acting as an advisor until 2018 when she fell out of favour after reporting revealed colossal spending on Donald Trump's inauguration, which she played a key role in organizing.

Anecdotes fill the 351-page book "Melania and Me: The Rise and Fall of My Friendship With the First Lady," purporting to lift the veil off the ex-model of Slovenian origin.

Often portrayed as enigmatic, Melania's pouty pursed lips are dissected on social media and at one point the slogan #FreeMelania painted her as the victim of a difficult husband.

Winston Wolkoff, a former Vogue events organizer, describes a much more aggressive figure, notably detailing how she and Melania choreographed every minute detail of the inauguration - and prevented Ivanka from appearing in key photos of the ceremony.

The 50-year-old first lady allegedly nicknamed her 38-year-old daughter-in-law "princess," calling her and her husband Jared Kushner "snakes."

Head Of Khmer Rouge Torture Prison Dies Aged 77

Phnom Penh, Cambodia: The former chief interrogator and top torturer for Cambodia's genocidal Khmer Rouge regime died early Wednesday in hospital in Phnom Penh. He was 77.

Kaing Guek Eav, better known by his alias Duch, had served as the head of the infamous Tuol Sleng prison and was later convicted of crimes against humanity by a UN-backed war crimes tribunal for his role in the "Killing Fields" regime.

A spokesman for the tribunal, Neth Pheaktra, said Duch, who had been hospitalised since Monday, died shortly after midnight. He had been in and out of the hospital for years, and had "a serious lung problem", a source said.

Born in 1942, the former mathematics teacher became the Khmer Rouge's top torturer when the ultra-Maoist regime was in power from 1975-1979.

Metro Services To Resume From Sept 7, Normal Operations From Sept 12: Puri

NEW DELHI: Union minister Hardeep Singh Puri on Wednesday said Metro services will resume in a graded manner from September 7 across the country and passengers will have to follow preventive measures against COVID-19 such as maintaining social distancing and wearing face mask.

Addressing an online media briefing, the Union housing and urban affairs minister said all Metro lines will become operational by September 12.

He said Metro stations in COVID-19 containment zones will, however, remain closed when services resume from September 7.

According to the ministry, Metro trains will not stop at stations where passengers are found not maintaining social distancing.

Puri said wearing face mask will be mandatory during travel on Metro trains and added that masks will be provided to passengers on payment basis at stations.

Metro services were suspended in late March when the government announced a nationwide lockdown to check the spread of the novel coronavirus.

In the national capital, Metro services have been suspended since March 22.

Delhi Metro Rail Corporation (DMRC) chief Mangu Singh said the Yellow Line from Samaypur Badli to Huda City Centre will be operational from September 7 and services on Airport Express Line will resume from September 12.

He said in the first stage, Delhi Metro services will operate in two shifts -- 7-11 am and 4-8 pm.

In the second stage, trains will be available from 7 am to 1 pm and from 4 pm to 10 pm, he said, adding that normal operations will resume from September 12. — PTI

Court Stay On Netflix's "Bad Boy Billionaires" Over Satyam Founder Plea

HYDERABAD: A local civil court has issued an interim stay restraining Netflix from airing its web series "Bad Boy Billionaires-India" on a petition filed by B Ramalinga Raju who was convicted in the multi-crore accounting scandal of Satyam Computer Services Limited.

The XXV Additional Chief Judge B Prathima, while issuing notices to Netflix Inc in USA, Netflix Entertainment Services India LLP and Nodal Officer, Department of Electronics and Information Technology, posted the matter for further hearing on November 18 when the plea came up yesterday.

The web series, scheduled for release in India on Wednesday, is promoted by Netflix as an "investigative docuseries" that "explores the greed, fraud and corruption that built up - and ultimately brought down - India's most infamous tycoons."

Ramalinga Raju alleged that the so-called investigative Docuseries will infringe his rights of fair trial and privacy besides defaming and tarnishing his image across nations.

The petitioner requested the court to declare the proposed move to release the docuseries and action in releasing its trailer as amounting to defamation and conducting of media trial pending the adjudication of case against him in the competent Courts of Law.

In April 2015, the Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court (ACMM) here had awarded seven-year rigorous imprisonment to Satyam Computers founder B Ramalinga Raju and nine others in the over 7,000-crore accounting fraud in the erstwhile IT firm which came to light in 2009.

The ACMM court, which tried the Satyam case probed by CBI, had sentenced Mr Raju and others to rigorous imprisonment for criminal conspiracy and cheating among other offences.

In May 2015, a metropolitan sessions court here granted bail to Ramalinga Raju and nine others and suspended their seven-year rigorous imprisonment sentence after they filed appeals.

Meanwhile, the Supreme Court Wednesday refused to entertain a plea filed by Netflix against a Bihar lower court order restraining it from using the name of businessman Subrata Roy in its upcoming web series.

On August 28, the Delhi High Court had dismissed a plea by Mehul Choksi, an accused in the nearly USD 2 billion PNB scam, to conduct pre-screening of Bad Boy Billionaires".

'Will Trade Nikes For Chicken': Millions Stripped Of Jobs Barter Possessions For Food

MANILA: Struggling to make ends meet, Lorraine Imperio swapped a pair of Nike slip-on shoes for a whole dressed chicken on an online bartering site, one of dozens that have sprouted up during the Philippines' virus lockdowns.

With millions stripped of their jobs and many forced to stay home to slow the coronavirus spread, Filipinos have flocked to Facebook groups to exchange their possessions, including kitchen appliances, children's toys and designer handbags—mostly for food.

"It's so difficult nowadays. You don't know where you'll get the money to settle the bills for groceries," said Imperio, a mother of two whose husband works part-time at a doughnut shop in Manila.

His hours have been slashed because of the pandemic and he now only earns about 9,000 pesos ($185) a month, half of which is used to pay the rent for the family's apartment.

Online bartering groups have provided a lifeline to the Imperios and other Filipinos hit hard by the country's months-long virus restrictions that started in March and have sent the economy plunging into a deep recession.

At least 98 groups, some with tens of thousands of members, are operating across the archipelago, according to an AFP tally.

Nearly all of them started during the pandemic as many Filipinos resorted to the ancient trading practice to feed their families.

Google search volume in the Philippines for the keywords "barter food" soared 300 percent in May from April, iPrice Group found in a recent study, as lockdowns squeezed household budgets and made travelling about difficult.

Its analysis of 85 popular Facebook barter groups, with more than two million members in total, found food and other groceries were among the most sought-after items.

People post photos and specifications of the goods they want to swap, indicate what they want in return and then negotiate via the comments section.

After successfully bartering baby bottles that she no longer needed, Imperio swapped a baby's down jacket and a Ralph Lauren hoodie for six kilograms (13 pounds) of rice.

While the Nike slip-on shoes were traded for a chicken, a second pair has not had any takers after three weeks.

"Old items are more difficult to sell," the 28-year-old said. "With bartering, it's easier to convert them into food."

Swapping to survive
Jocelle Batapa Sigue launched Bacolod Barter Community four months ago out of frustration at not being able to go shopping and a desire to help others.

Her husband held the family's only quarantine travel pass, which people were required to carry when they left their homes during the lockdown.

"It's difficult for me to get what I want when I tell my husband to buy it," said Sigue, who is a lawyer in the central city of Bacolod.

The group has more than 230,000 members with more joining every day, she said.

Sigue estimates thousands of items—from shampoo and birthday cakes to mobile phones and eyeliner—change hands on her site daily.

"Without the pandemic, I don't think the barter community would be popular," she said.

An estimated 5.2 million Filipino families had experienced "hunger due to lack of food to eat" at least once in the previous three months—the highest in nearly six years, a survey in early July by pollster Social Weather Stations showed.

But it is not just cash-strapped people bartering their belongings. Others are taking the chance to dispose of goods they no longer need after quarantine measures upended normal life.

Chona de Vega, 57, traded her hair-straightener and electric kettle for a bag of groceries and now plans to dispose of her iron. "I have no use for it," said de Vega, who lives in Manila and spends most of her time at home because of travel restrictions.

UP Government Can Frame Me In Another Case, Says Kafeel Khan After Release From Jail

LUCKNOW: The Uttar Pradesh government instead of doing 'Raj Dharma' was indulging in 'Baal Hatth' or childlike-stubbornness and could frame him in another case, Dr Kafeel Khan said after he was released from the Mathura jail late on Tuesday night.

The Allahabad High Court on Tuesday quashed Khan's detention under the National Security Act and ordered his immediate release.

Following the court's order, Khan was released from Mathura jail late on Tuesday night. "Mathura jail administration informed at around 11.00 pm that Dr Kafeel will be released, and at around midnight, he was released," Khan's lawyer Irfan Ghazi told PTI.

Speaking to PTI after his release from the jail, Khan thanked the court and said, "I will always remain thankful to all my well-wishers, who raised their voice for my release. The administration was not ready for release, but because of the prayers (dua) of people, I have been released."

"In Ramayana, Maharshi Valmiki

had said that the Raja (king) should act for 'Raj Dharma'. In UP the 'Raja' is not doing 'Raj Dharma' but is doing 'Baal Hatth' (being stubborn like a child)," Khan said.

He also said he was apprehensive that the government can frame him in any other case, and claimed that he and his family had to face many hardships as the state government was "after" him because of the oxygen issue in BRD Medical College.

Khan said he now wants to help flood-affected people in Bihar and Assam. The bench, comprising Chief Justice Govind Mathur and Justice Saumitra Dayal Singh, passed the order on a petition filed by Khan's mother Nuzhat Parveen.

The petition alleged that Khan was granted bail in February by a competent court and he was supposed to be released on bail. However, he was not released for four days and the NSA was subsequently invoked against him. Hence, his detention was illegal, the petition argued.

Khan was in jail since January after he delivered an allegedly provocative speech at the Aligarh Muslim University (AMU) during the anti-Citizenship (Amendment) Act (CAA) protests in December last year.

Kafeel Khan had hit the headlines for the first time in 2017 after the deaths of several kids due to lack of oxygen cylinders at Gorakhpur's BRD Medical College, where he worked as a paediatrician. Initially, he was hailed as a saviour for the children for arranging emergency oxygen cylinders. However, later, he faced action along with nine other doctors and staff members of the hospital, all of whom were released on bail.

Average 381 Suicides Daily In India In 2019: Data

NEW DELHI: India reported an average 381 deaths by suicide daily in 2019, totalling 1,39,123 fatalities over the year, according to the latest National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) data.

A 3.4 per cent increase was observed in suicides during 2019 (1,39,123 suicides) as compared to 2018 (1,34,516) and 2017 (1,29,887), the data showed.

The rate of suicide (incidents per 1 lakh population) rose by 0.2 per cent in 2019 over 2018, as per the data.

According to the statistics by the NCRB, which functions under the Union Home Ministry, the suicide rate in cities (13.9 per cent) was higher as compared to all-India suicide rate (10.4 per cent) in 2019.

Suicide by "hanging" (53.6 per cent), "consuming poison" (25.8 per cent), "drowning" (5.2 per cent) and "self-immolation" (3.8 per cent) were the prominent means of committing suicides during the year, the data showed.

Family problems (other than marriage-related issues) were behind 32.4 per cent of suicides, marriage-related problems (5.5 per cent) and illness (17.1 per cent) together accounted for 55 per cent of the total suicides in the country during 2019, it stated.

For every 100 suicide deaths, 70.2 were male and 29.8 females, the NCRB, which collects data from police recorded cases, stated. Nearly 68.4 per cent of the male victims were married, whereas the ratio was 62.5 per cent for female victims, the data showed.

Majority of suicides were reported in Maharashtra (18,916), followed by 13,493 in Tamil Nadu, 12,665 in West Bengal, 12,457 in Madhya Pradesh and 11,288 in Karnataka, accounting for 13.6 per cent, 9.7 per cent, 9.1 per cent, 9 per cent and 8.1 per cent of total such deaths, respectively.

These five states together accounted for 49.5 per cent of the total suicides reported in the country and the rest 50.5 per cent suicides were reported in the remaining 24 states and 7 UTs, the data showed.

Uttar Pradesh, the most populous state, reported comparatively lower percentage share of suicidal deaths, accounting for only 3.9 per cent of the total suicides in the country, it added.

Maximum cases of mass/family suicide were reported from Tamil Nadu (16) followed by Andhra Pradesh (14), Kerala (11), Punjab (9) and Rajasthan (7), the NCRB data showed.

In terms of education, 12.6 per cent victims of suicide were illiterate, 16.3 per cent up to primary level, 19.6 per cent up to middle level and 23.3 per cent up to matric level.

Only 3.7 per cent of total suicide victims were graduates and above, it showed.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) states that suicide is a serious public "health problem" and is "preventable" with timely, evidence-based and often low-cost interventions.

Probe Agency Arrests Man In 20,000-Crore Money-Laundering Case In Delhi

NEW DELHI: The Enforcement Directorate (ED) has arrested alleged "hawala" dealer Naresh Jain in a money-laundering probe linked to "hawala" transactions worth about 20,000 crore, officials said on Wednesday.

They said Naresh Jain has been arrested under sections of the Prevention of Money Laundering Act (PMLA) and will be produced before a court.

A maze of multiple shell or dubious firms and at least 600 bank accounts are under the scanner of the agency in the case, touted to be one of the biggest hawala and trade-based money-laundering cases of the country.

The officials said Naresh Jain and his associates are being probed for "hawala" or illegal financial transactions, including overseas ones, worth about 20,000 crore that have been carried out over the last few years.

The agency has also found out about the regular modus operandi of "generations of fake invoices for bogus import and exports" of the accused in the case, with Jain allegedly being the key player.

The Delhi-based businessman was under the scanner of probe agencies for long and in 2016, the ED had slapped a 1,200-crore notice on him for alleged contravention of the forex law.

According to the agencies, Naresh Jain has allegedly laundered and routed "hawala" funds for years, financed contraband networks and was also arrested by the Narcotics Control Bureau (NCB) in the past.

The ED money-laundering case is based on this NCB complaint.

The agency has been on Naresh Jain's trail since 2009, after he moved his operations to India from Dubai.

Pranab Mukherjee's Daughter To Decide Whether To Publish His Diaries

NEW DELHI: Former President of India Pranab Mukherjee, who died on Monday, had made his daughter Sharmistha Mukherjee custodian of the diaries he wrote almost every day during his five-decade political career and authorised her to take a call on publishing them.

"He has left his diaries with me, and left it to my discretion whether to get them published or not," Sharmistha Mukherjee said.

The former President, who had tested positive for coronavirus, died on Monday, weeks after his brain surgery. The 84-year had died after being in hospital for 20 days. He came into politics in 1969 and subsequently served as minister for External Affairs, Defence, Finance and Commerce and then as India's 13th president.

Writing a diary every day was one of Pranab Mukherjee's ways to keep his famously encyclopaedic memory razor sharp until the very end, said his close friends.

"I once asked him what the fate of his diaries would be, and he had said he'd given them to his daughter... because a lot of controversies can take place. In his diaries, he wrote whatever he thought... things that were off the record but he didn't want to publish it before his death," said veteran journalist Jayanta Ghoshal.

Mr Ghoshal, who had known the late politician since 1985, said Mukherjee was in the habit of writing diaries since his days as cabinet minister in the Indira Gandhi government and continued to write them even after retiring as president.

In fact, the length of his entries had increased after he demitted the president's office, he said.

Gautam Lahiri, another senior journalist and long-time friend, added that the seven-time parliamentarian would write a diary every day, but the entry would be for events that took place two days earlier.

"I asked him once what the secret of his razor sharp memory was, and he told me that he wrote diaries not for the day's event but for what happened two days ago. I try to remember that," he said.

"So he would write diary entries every day for events that happened 48 hours ago. In this way he would stimulate and exercise his mind," Mr Lahiri said.

One entry that Mr Lahiri knows of is a drawing by Pranab Mukherjee's granddaughter. This followed a conversation between Pranab Mukherjee, the child and then prime minister Manmohan Singh.

"After Pranab Mukherjee was elected as president, Manmohan Singh went to his house and Pranab da called his granddaughter and said, 'You were looking for a prime minister, he is a PM.' She didn't believe it and ran away.

"Later that day, his granddaughter drew a picture of Pranab da as PM. That picture is entered in his diary as a memory of the interaction between Manmohan Singh, his granddaughter and himself," Mr Lahiri recounted.

The entire interaction, the journalist explained, stemmed from the much talked about topic of how Pranab Mukherjee never became prime minister.

"Like most people, his family too felt that he should be made PM. He never aspired for that and he never told anybody. He believed that the president and the PM's posts are so honourable that they can only be offered... one cannot go hankering after them. But his family members, even his grandchildren believed that one day he would become PM," Mr Lahiri said.

"Muted At Justice Arun Mishra's Farewell": Dushyant Dave To Chief Justice

NEW DELHI: Senior advocate and President of the Supreme Court Bar Association Dushyant Dave shot off a critical letter to Chief Justice SA Bobde today expressing his disappointment at not being allowed to speak at the farewell of Justice Arun Mishra.

Advocate Dave, who has long been critical of the senior Supreme Court judge, said in his letter: "I will never again participate in any function being organised by the Supreme Court till my term as Supreme Court Bar Association President is over in December".

Advocate Dave said he had accepted an invitation to join the Ceremonial Bench of the Chief Justice of India, but was not allowed to speak.

He had alleged that his microphone was "put on mute" when Justice Mishra's virtual farewell started at the end of the hearing of day's cases through video-conferencing.

"I must confess, the Supreme Court has come to such levels where the Judges are afraid of the Bar. Please do remember, Judges come and go but we, the Bar, remain constant. We are the real strength of this great Institution because we are permanent," he said.

"I saw and heard all the proceedings clearly... For some unknown reasons, I was being disconnected again and again, but I persisted and rejoined each time," Mr Dave said.

He further wrote that after an address by the CJ, Justice Mishra was invited to speak.

"At that stage, realising the game plan, I exited in the larger interests of the dignity of the Bar and Myself. But what is most important is that I messaged the Secretary-General asking why I was kept on mute and why was I at all invited... He responded (almost two hours later) saying he is instructing the Registrar to look into it, by which time it was too late.
