with the practice. While some of these employees pasted placards in support of their demands on their torso, several others wore T-shirts bearing photographs of Bhat. 'We have been sitting here of the vedic chants associated

Simple Glucose-Meter Test Can Be Used To Monitor Covid-19 Antibody Levels

Press Trust Of India

esearchers have developed a simple, glucose-meter test that can help people monitor their own antibody levels against the SARS-CoV-2 virus, that causes COVID-19.

The team from Johns Hopkins University in the US noted that overthe-counter COVID-19 tests can quickly show whether a person is infected with SARS-CoV-2.

However, if a person has a positive result, there is no at-home test to assess how long they will remain protected against reinfection.

In the Journal of the American Chemical Society, researchers described a simple, accurate glucosemeter-based test incorporating a novel fusion protein.

They said that consumers could someday use this assay to monitor their own SARS-CoV-2 antibody levels.

Vaccines against SARS-CoV-2 and infection with the virus itself can guard against future infections for a while, but it's unclear exactly how long that protection lasts, the researchers said.

A good indication of immune protection is a person's level of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies, but the gold standard measurement -- the enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) -- requires expensive equipment and specialized technicians, they said.

Glucose meters are readily available, easy to use and can be integrated with remote clinical services, according to the researchers. Researchers have been adapting these devices to sense other target molecules, coupling detection with glucose production.

For example, if a detection antibody in the test binds to an antibody in a patient's blood, then a reaction occurs that produces glucose -- something the device detects very well.

Invertase is an attractive enzyme for this type of analysis because it converts sucrose into glucose, but it's difficult to attach the enzyme to detection antibodies with chemical approaches.

The researchers wanted to see whether producing a fusion protein consisting of both in-vertase and a detection antibody would work in an assay that would allow SARS-CoV-2 antibody levels to be read with a glucose meter.

They designed and produced a novel fusion protein containing both invertase and a mouse antibody that binds to human immunoglobulin (IgG) antibodies.

The team showed that the fusion protein bound to human IgGs and successfully produced glucose from sucrose.

The researchers then made test strips with the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein on them. When dipped in COVID-19 patient samples, the SARS-CoV-2 antibodies bound to the spike protein.

Adding the invertase/IgG fusion protein, then sucrose, led to the production of glucose, which could be detected by a glucose meter.

The researchers validated the test by performing the analysis with glucose meters on a variety of patient samples, and found that the new assay worked as well as four different ELISAs.

The method can also be adapted to test for SARS-CoV-2 variants and other infectious diseases, they added.

European 'Star Survey' Reveals Celestial Treasure Trove

The European Space Agency has released a trove of data on almost 2 billion stars in the Milky Way, collected by its Gaia mission in an effort to create the most accurate and complete map of our galaxy. This can be used, for example, to determine which stars were born in another galaxy and then migrated to the Milky Way.

"This is an incredible gold mine for astronomy," said Antonella Vallenari, who helped lead a consortium of 450 scientists and engineers that spent years turning the measurements collected by the probe into usable data. Gaia was also able to detect more than 100,000 socalled starquakes, which ESA likened to large tsunamis that ripple across stars. These allow scientists to deduce the density, interior rotation and temperature inside stars, astrophysicist Conny Aerts said.

Although it has only collected information on about 1% of the Milky Way's stars, the mission is already providing the basis for around 1,600 scientific publications a year.

Project scientist Timo Prusti said the sheer number of stars observed makes it more likely that scientists will make very rare discov-

ESA chief Josef Aschbacher said having more data also allows astronomers to understand some of the forces at play in the galaxy, such as the way our own solar system is being thrown about inside the Milky Way.

It is enabling things that would never be possible without this large number of data, he said.

The Gaia data now being released also includes information on 800,000 binaries stars that move in tandem with each other as well as several new exoplanets, hundreds of thousands of asteroids in the solar system and millions of objects beyond our galaxy.

City Autowallas Feeling The Heat Of E-Rickshaws

Syed Mohammad Burhan

Srinagar: Two months after e-rickshaws were introduced as an alternative transport in the city, petroldriven auto rickshaw drivers have started to feel the heat.

Eco-friendly electronic autorickshaw service was started in the month of April in several parts, including Dalgate to Nehru Park, Gawkadal to Bohri Kadal, Dalgate to Khanyar, Khayam to Zulankar and other areas, due to lack of public transport facilities and rising pollution levels in Srinagar.

The e-rickshaws are considered eco-friendly and run on a chargeable Lithium battery.

But while commoners have benefited from the pocket and environment friendly mode of transport, traditional auto rickshaw drivers complain their passenger count has significantly dropped since the service started to ply on the city roads.

E-rickshaws usually charge a fare of Rs 10 per passenger for a distance of around two kilometers.

Younis Parvez Mir, an auto-rickshaw driver, said this is not the right time to be an auto-rickshaw driver.

"Owning an auto rickshaw isn't easy," Younis said, adding a brand new auto rickshaw costs around Rs 4.5 lakhs excluding the maintenance costs.

"We have to take care of ownership, fitness, permit and pollution certificates also. We are bound to charge customers according to the costs we infer," he said.

Oppositely, he said, owning an Erickshaw is way too easy as it comes with no hidden costs and the government is providing subsidy for the same. "The cost of e-rickshaw ranges between Rs 2-2.5 lakhs, which is very cost-efficient for a rickshaw driver compared to fuel driven public transport," Younis said.

Mohammad Amin, another rickshaw driver from Shiraz Chowk Khanvar, voiced similar views saving the passenger count has dropped significantly ever since the e-rickshaw was started.

"We charge Rs 50 from Shriaz Chowk to Dalgate whereas e-rickshaw charges only Rs 10," Amin said. "It is obvious that commuters will prefer the latter mode of transportation," he added.

It is pertinent to mention, amid the rising pollution resulting from growing traffic in Srinagar, the authorities have decided to introduce the r-rickshaws in several parts of the city.

But while commuting in the city has become much easier, it has come at a heavy cost for the traditional auto-rickshaw drivers.

panied by a police party from PCR. LCMA said that it will continue demolition drives of illegal constructions and strict action will be taken against the violators found indulging in illegal construction activities.

People Launch Forum For Mughal Road

rinagar- To counter elements inimical to the construction of the Mughal Road, residents of Shopvan have launched a Forum campaign in favour of resuming work on the crucial project.

The road, which takes off from Shopvan and leads to the Poonch district links the Kashmir valley to the Jammu province and is an alternative to the existing, but unreliable, Srinagar-Jammu Highway.

Ever since the central government cleared the project, it has been facing roadblock of various sorts, including environmental concerns voiced by certain quarters, but last month the Supreme Court had ruled that attempts to halt work on the road

Locals in the Shopyan however say that some vested interests and regressive elements are opposed to constructing the alternative to the Srinagar-Jammu highway. They have united under a non-political banner, the Front Against Anti-Mughal Road Elements, which will kick off its campaign to mobilize public opinion in favour of the road by a seminar in the Shopyan town hall on the coming Monday. The Mughal Road is a long standing demand of the people in the valley, particularly in Shopyan and experts consider it a viable substitute for the Srinagar-Jammu highway.

The valley's sole surface link with the rest of the country, is prone to massive landslides in bad weather and remains closed for weeks on end. Travelers often get stranded for days together. and a dependent Kashmir is deprived of essential supplies.

Experts believe that constructing the Mughal Road would bring such problems down to zero. But Shopyan residents say that the project is prey to petty politics as some vested interests are bent upon sacrificing the collective interests of Kashmiris. A public delegation from Shopyan said that for now they have deemed it appropriate to adopt a democratic approach, but if their voce goes unheard: they will take to the streets, and entire responsibility for the consequences will lay on the government t has been intermittently raining in the Valley over the last two days with high-altitude areas receiving the snowfall. This has resulted in a sharp drop in temperature in June, a time for the sweltering summer heat. But the decline in temperature is the least of concern for people in Kashmir who fear that an extended rainfall in summer could lead to flooding on the pattern of 2014. And these are legitimate fears considering we are still far from building credible safeguards against the prospect of a future flood. A recent report pointed out that the project to enhance the carrying capacity of Jhelum is yet to be fully completed as the J&K government is awaiting the release of funds from the central government for Phase 2 of the Jhelum Flood Management plan. The centre has already earmarked Rs 1623 crore for the comprehensive flood management of Jhelum and its tributaries.

The project was conceived in the wake of the 2014 deluge that sank Srinagar and some other parts of the Valley and killed over 300 people. Ever since J&K, particularly the Valley has lived in dread of a repeat of yet another big flood. In Srinagar, people fear that an extended uninterrupted spell of rain might yet again lead to Jhelum spilling over its banks.

This has created a deeply disturbing situation in the Valley. We are, time and again, reminded of our hapless vulnerability to flooding whenever there are two or more days of uninterrupted rain in a warmer season. More so, in Srinagar whose new-found susceptibility to flood threatens to put a question mark on its viability as a summer capital. That is, unless we conceive and execute a course of action that drastically reduces this vulnerability

If anything, it highlights how little has been done by way of infrastructure building to protect the Valley from flooding. Less than two days of rain creates flood-like conditions. What it means is that in the past eight years, we have not been able to increase the capacity to protect ourselves from the fallout of an increase in precipitation in summer. The legitimate question to ask is what were the previous governments doing in these years. Or what has the dredging of Jhelum and the repairing of its embankments done in terms of enhancing our capability to resist the flood. One can only hope that the current administration understands the enormity of the challenge and sets about in right earnest building our defences against a repeat of the 2014 scenario, which could be sooner than we are prepared for.

OTHER OPINON

ainfall has been 22 per cent deficient in South Peninsular India, while it is 50-134 per cent in excess in Arunachal Pradesh, Assam, Meghalaya, Sikkim and north Bengal. Floods and landslides at one end, and largely localised rains due to weak monsoon winds at the other, has meant that sowing of kharif crops (excluding sugarcane) is down 16 per cent over last year's acreage at this time. That could make policymakers a tad nervous, especially given elevated food prices. Most projections of inflation and real GDP growth, including by the Reserve Bank of India, have been predicated on the assumption of a normal monsoon

But these are early days. Rainfall deficiency has already reduced from 32 per cent till June 15. Kharif plantings usually pick up only after mid-June and peak in July. Also, current water levels in major reservoirs are 4.9 per cent higher than a year ago and 32.9 per cent above the last 10 years' average for this time. A slow start — the monsoon season extends from June to September, with nearly 62 per cent of the rainfall received during the two middle months — can even be a blessing. It gives additional time for the government and farm input companies to plan movement and placement of seeds, fertilisers and crop protection chemicals. This may matter more in today's situation, where the Russia-Ukraine war and China's Covid lockdowns have caused supply disruptions and delays in imports, including of fertilisers and agro-chemical intermediates. For now, all indicators — from La Niña to sustained high summer temperatures conducive for formation of a low-pressure system — point to a normal monsoon. Better late than never, as the saying goes

That said, the monsoon's increasing unpredictability—not just delays and breaks, but also fewer rainy days and more extreme precipitation—is cause for concern. Take last year, when surplus rains in June led to brisk sowings. But this was followed by a long dry spell from the second week of July to the third week of August and, then, excess rainfall in the subsequent five months till January. The kharif crop, then, suffered both moisture stress during the vegetative growth stage and inundation at harvesting time. That, along with the hit to wheat yields from the sudden rise in temperatures after mid-March, was the clearest evidence of the challenges posed by climate change: To policymakers, breeders and, of course, farmers.

Over to Elections

As things stand, it looks unlikely that the centre would let any situation arise following the polls, that challenges its Kashmir project or threatens to reverse the gains made in recent years

RIYAZ WANI

Delimitation Commission has already ended up changing the political landscape of J&K like never before. It could very well pave way for a future chief minister who is from Jammu, a longstanding political plank of

n his recent visit to Jammu and Kashmir, Defence Minister Rajnath Singh said the decks had been cleared to hold the Assembly elections by the end of this year. The defense minister's tentative timeline for the polls came two days after the Election Commission started the process to revise the electoral rolls for the union territory. The process to prepare the draft rolls will be completed by August 31, setting potentially the stage for elections. The winter, however, won't be the right time to hold the exercise in Kashmir Valley. Nevertheless, a large number of people would most likely prefer the elections to take place regardless of the season. If for no other reason than approachability, there is a palpable desire to see local politicians return to government.

But things become more complex as we delve into details. The context of the fresh elections, whenever these are held, is very fraught. Much has happened since June 2018 when Governor's rule was imposed after the PDP-led coalition government lost its majority following the withdrawal of support by the BJP. Jammu and Kashmir lost its semi-autonomous status on August 5, 2019 leading to seven months of communications and security blockade. The last three years have witnessed a drastic political makeover of the stateturned-union territory, so much so, that in many aspects, the current J&K bears little resemblance to what it was pre-August 2019.

In the last three years, Kashmir has witnessed an uneasy calm. The protests and the stone-pelting incidents have gradually tapered off. But the militancy has so far held out. That too, despite the killings of over 500 militants over the last three years.

According to a police estimate, there are around 150 active militants in Kashmir, the lowest such number in the last seven years. This has, for once, created a distinct possibility that the militancy could very well end in the next few months or over the course of this year if there is no replenishment of the ranks in the form of local recruitment or influx from across the border. Also, contrary to the apprehensions, the foreign presence in the Valley's militancy has only increasingly diminished over the years - that is, if we consider the current spike as an exception.

This has put the militancy in the union territory apparently on a shaky wicket. But it is premature and also risky to make predictions about Kashmir. In the past also, this ebb and flow have continued. As the history of the past thirty years shows, the militancy has gone on. And it seems unlikely to die down unless the replenishment stops, something that has never happened so far. And appears unlikely to happen in the near to medium future. This is why while public unrests and stone throwing have drastically diminished since the withdrawal of Article 370, militancy has continued unabated. And there is little sign that the situation on this score will change anytime soon.

What is more, security agencies have already warned that the violence could once again scale up further this year, with the local militancy expected to be reinforced by the influx of foreign militants - albeit, there have so far been no indications that this is happening in bigger numbers.

That said, the elections in J&K have been held in the worst possible situation, and sometimes in the wake of the extended public unrest. If we go by the centre's assurances, the Assembly polls would be the second in a threestep process towards restoration of statehood to J&K. First was the completion of the contentious exercise of the Delimitation Commission which enhanced the number of Assembly seats in the Union Territory from 83 to 90 And statehood would be the third.

The Delimitation Commission has already ended up changing the political landscape of J&K like never before. It could very well pave the way for a future chief minister who is from Jammu, a longstanding political plank of the BJP. And once that happens, there is little guarantee that statehood would be the next logical step. Or whether the statehood to be granted would be full or a truncated one one that resembles a Delhi-type arrangement where the real power remains vested with the governor. Such an arrangement would hardly be enough to make a redeeming difference to the existing state of affairs in J&K, as fundamentally there wouldn't be much that would change on the ground.

An ideal arrangement from the BJP's point of view would be a government dominated by the party, whose chances following the delimitation of seats look brighter. Or, at least, a government of the party or parties which have reconciled to the loss of the autonomy as a fait accompli. And such a scenario looks very much possible. Over the last three years. the centre has successfully formed parties which if not directly toeing its line would dare also not question it. That is, as long as the BJP is in power at the centre. As things stand, it looks unlikely that the centre would let any situation arise following the polls, that challenges its Kashmir project or threatens to reverse the gains made in recent years.

The Ugly Remains of Brari Nambal

e have heard tales from our elders about the pristine water bodies of Kashmir, which were once so pure that people would directly drink from the water bodies. Once known for crystal clear waters, the only remains of Brari Nambal are waste heaps and weeds. Barari Nambal is an important ecological lagoon located in the heart of shehr-e-khaas but due to the neglect of the government and absence of conservation measures, the lagoon is on the verge of extinction owing to dire pollution and unending encroachments. The lagoon looks more like a dumping yard than a water body.

Although the government did formulate an extensive project for the restoration of Brari Nambal in 2015 but despite the passing of nearly a decade, the government has consistently failed in achieving so. So far there has been aesthetic work on the peripheries of the lagoon but no actual measure has been taken to improve its water quality which should have been the very first priority of the authorities. We need to realise that building good looking kiosks on the banks of the lagoon will not aid the conservation of the water body, it needs frequent dredging and cleaning to keep its water fresh. The government should pay proper heed to this matter before it's too late and we lose a very significant cultural and ecological asset of ours.

Keeping an Open Mind

The human mind is the loudest and the most disruptive noise in the world

Perspectives flurry back and forth, with not a speck of acrimony or impatience to beat down the others. There is so much involvement and acceptance among them that by the end, they turn wiser and more clued up about the topic of the day. And what do they gain from the whole exercise?

Asha Iyer Kumar

've just got out of a creative writing class with my three 10th graders. It was a highly interactive session with discussions based on an opinion essay I had given them as an assignment. The one-hour class extended to an hour and 45 minutes, and boy, did I have a good time listening to their intuitive ideas!

This is how my classes go, with robust thought exchanges to which I listen with the keenness of an explorer. I remove my thinking cap, park my perceptions, and allow the children to present their thoughts. I interrupt only to throw in a question now and then to steer the conversation in different directions. I tender a willing ear, not allowing any of my own ideas to interject their views. And they speak, baring their hearts, because they know that I am listening, appreciating every bit of their ingenuity.

Perspectives flurry back and forth, with not a speck of acrimony or impatience to beat down the others. There is so much involvement and acceptance among them that by the end, they turn wiser and more clued up about the topic of the day. And what do they gain from the whole exercise? Clarity about things we often ponder upon but don't get anywhere near a closure. The final winner is not a participant, but the art of listening that facilitates the smooth flow of thoughts without stumbling over untimely interruptions and presumptuous assertions.

Listening - it is an art we are slowly losing to our zealous desire to be heard over the millions of voices echoing around. We have become hard of hearing by choice in a cacophonous world, and that is an irony. So much din with no one to pay attention to. So, who are we talking to? And why aren't we listening?

The human mind is the loudest and the most disruptive noise in the world, and what makes it so difficult to ignore is the power we give to our inner ramblings. We cannot turn a deaf ear to the voice of our minds. We develop so much attachment with our perceptions that we preclude anything that isn't in tune with it. Our love for our own theories, our unstinting faith in our judgements, and our refusal to allow foreign ideas into our space makes listening a lesser trait that we believe we could do without.

It is good to be steadfast in our mind and know what our core beliefs are, but when we ignore the voices outside, we are limiting ourselves like the proverbial frog that thought the world began and ended with the well. Our refusal to listen to divergent views exposes our deep-seated prejudices and conceit. It is the ultimate pointer to our indomitable egos that will settle for nothing less than an unchallenged acceptance of our viewpoints.

Those who enjoy a good argument get involved in meaningless diatribes, and those who don't, switch their hearing aids off and let the other man air his views to no avail. Either way, there is no exchange of useful information or ideas that could expand our horizons and help us take better decisions in life.

Our lack of listening skills has begun to shrink our mental and emotional territories, cramping us in narrow ideologies. We are becoming more and more polarized and intolerant as people, and our inability to accommodate differing views is turning us into islands of haughty homo sapiens.

Pay heed to other voices because you never know from where the next big solution to your combined troubles will emerge. Our options in life might lay in someone else's head, and when we listen, we realize that there is a bit of us in every other person, and a bit of them in us. We understand our dilemmas better when we listen to their versions and interpretations of life.

When we keep an open mind, bracketing our own ideas for a while and keeping our judgment at bay, we will see how many different ways there are to make this mortal journey pleasurable. When we control our urge to refute, defend or deflect outright, and allow patience to settle in, we will know that we all have the same kinds of delights and disappointments, and the same destiny to deal with.

It is only when we are willing to listen to different sources that we will become aware of the universal story of mankind and find creative ideas to solve this massive jigsaw puzzle. Else, all we would have in our lives is a lot of sound and fury that in the end would signify nothing.

When Dads Do What Moms Do

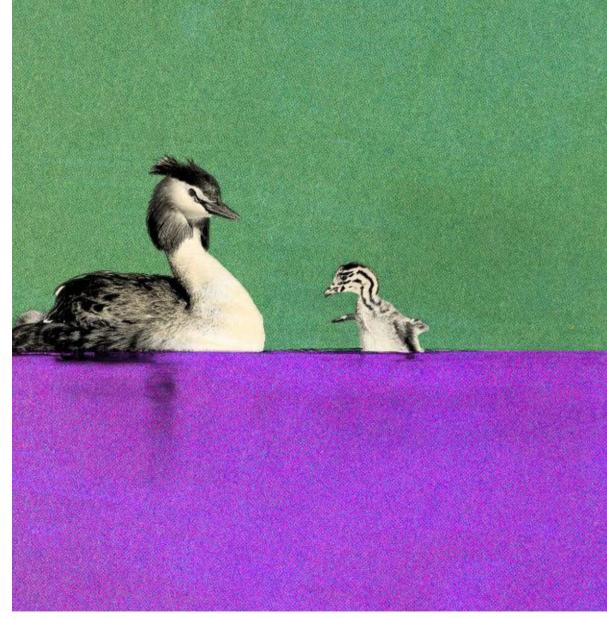

Amil Niazi

Then I was around 9 years old, my mom started a new job, at a women's shelter, that required monthly overnight shifts. Up until then, she had worked part-time day shifts while we were at school. She juggled most of the domestic work at home by herself, from getting us ready in the mornings— including painstakingly doing all of our very long hair — to driving us home after school, making dinner, and putting us to bed. With Mom's new job, my dad, who'd always been involved but not necessarily superhands-on for things like meal prep or school runs, was suddenly thrust into these "mom duties" for three young girls, all under the age of 10. I distinctly remember feeling a sense of apprehension even then, like, Is this guy really going to pull this off? Does he even know how to turn the stove on? Are we going to die?

Nobody died, of course. (Although there might have been some temporary baldness from the shockingly tight — and crooked — high ponytails he managed those mornings.) We did eat a lot of fast food, but what child has ever complained about that? And though we were almost never on time for school, we otherwise mostly managed.

It was a major shift in how my parents negotiated child care - for a while. Suddenly, and temporarily, for my parents who had previously divided domestic labor along oldfashioned and gendered lines, things seemed a little more balanced. My mom, despite also working outside the home, had usually been the main parent, the emotional core, the cook, and the cleaner. But after a few months redressing this imbalance, my mom, though still doing her overnight shifts, slowly started cooking dinners again, packing our school lunches the day before, brushing out our hair so we didn't have to rely on dad's ponytails anymore. The sharing of labor was brief and short lived, and whatever slack my mom couldn't pick up herself, my sisters and I learned to do for ourselves.

While on the spectrum of boomer dads, mine was nonetheless probably on the right side of good. He was still very much the picture of fatherhood that has dominated culture up until very recently: Dad as the bumbling backup player, the guy who weasels out of changing diapers and proudly calls it "babysitting" every time he has to take care of his own kids for a few hours by himself.

As with so many facets of parenting life, the pandemic began to shift our notion of how much (straight cisgender) dads are expected to carry and how it impacts the family unit. Stuck working from home without in-person schooling or child care, many men were tasked with figuring out how to manage care and work out of necessity. It's a little harder to ignore screaming children when they're in the background of your work Zoom, right? Although it's worth noting, even with both parents forced into the same situation, women still ended up doing three times as much child care as men during the first year of the pandemic. So even with the notion of the pandemic as a great equalizer of care, our expectations and the realities of "dad duties" remained abysmally low.

Why is this disparity still so prevalent, especially since the past two years should have made it abundantly clear, even to anyone still choosing to be in the dark, just how overwhelming it is to manage work and care without adequate support? No one should have any doubt now about what happens when this burden is overwhelmingly on one parent. So how do we prevent it?

It has to start at the very beginning. There's an assumption that caring for a new baby is the purview of the mom. She's expected to be fluent in the language of child-rearing even though, in the beginning, it's just as foreign to her as it is to her partner. And it becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy: She becomes the de facto expert because she spends the most time figuring out the solutions; then, because she knows what to do, she's always left to do it. But there's a way, I think, to break that loop. Where I have seen the scales balance out a little more, with my husband and with many of our friends, there's been one common factor: dads who took parental leave.

My husband became the sole caregiver of our son when he was around 6 months old. I didn't intend to cut my maternity leave short (in Canada, I was entitled to up to 18 months), but I ended up accepting a job offer that required me to go back sooner than expected. Before that, my husband had taken just three weeks off work after our son was born, and while it was immensely helpful to me, it didn't necessarily mean he took on an equal amount of infant care; it just meant we were both home at the same time. But suddenly, with me back at work, he had to take on feeding (both keeping up with bottles and introducing new solid foods), bathing, adjusting new nap times, managing the vaccine schedule, taking him to doctors' appointments, teaching him how to crawl, how to talk, how to be a person. He explored all the parks in our new city and went to the drop-ins to meet other parents (mostly moms). My husband now understood the gravity of the work required to care for a baby - "mom duties." It lasted only four months; when my son was 10 months old, my husband accepted a job offer, and the baby went to day care. But that early care totally shifted the balance of care in our family, from bedtimes to housework.

That doesn't mean we have some idyllic, egalitarian split but simply that the entirety of domestic responsibility doesn't fall on me because my partner knows what it is to do all of that on your own. I've seen similar approaches with other friends when both parents were able to have the opportunity to figure it out early on

That doesn't mean we have some idyllic, egalitarian split but simply that the entirety of domestic responsibility doesn't fall on me because my partner knows what it is to do all of that on your own. I've seen similar approaches with other friends when both parents were able to have the opportunity to figure it out early on. They take turns supporting each other both at home and with their creative or professional pursuits because they understand what it takes to manage both. Were more men to have mandated access to parental leave — not just the option to stay home but a requirement to take some amount of leave that allows them the opportunity to handle the joys and struggles of child care — it's likely the effects would resonate far beyond the immediate ability to perfect the newborn swaddle.

As long as the domestic domain is the responsibility of mothers, we'll remain in this dysfunctional nightmare in which millions of women can be forced out of the workforce to care for children and we hardly bat an eyelash — in which an epidemic of burnout can cripple families, run our mental health ragged, and lead to an endless chorus of cries for help with the answer from all parties seeming to be "Deal with it"

It's so clear, from the formula shortage to the looming threat to abortion access, that far too many men, despite being fathers, remain ignorant about how child care actually works. You will never know the haunting prospect of a hungry infant until you're responsible for feeding that child. You will always see a forced pregnancy as something trivial until that life you mandated into the world is your sole responsibility. Any solutions that address the modern parenting crisis have to shift the burden off women and lead with the understanding that care work is work and it's universal. And it has to begin at the very beginning. Children are not a woman's problem, but for too long, even the most progressive men have made it so. We're in it together or we're not in it at all.

No change in existing recruitment process, Agnipath will draw best talent: Military

Press Trust Of India

NEW DELHI: The three military services on Tuesday said the Agnipath scheme will not entail any change in the existing system of recruitment of soldiers and will not at all impact their combat capabilities and operational readiness.

At a media briefing, additional secretary in the defence ministry's department of military affairs Lt Gen Anil Puri addressed various issues raised about the new scheme, asserting it has not been brought to "right-size" the armed forces but to lower their age-profile and enhance their overall capability.

Several parts of the country witnessed violent protests after the announcement of the new model that seeks to recruit youths between the age bracket of 17-and-half years to 21 for only four years with a provision to years. For 2022, the upper age limit has been extended to 23 years.

There will be no change in the recruitment process. What happened five years ago, what happened earlier, the same will continue," Lt Gen Puri said, adding those recruited under the scheme will be eligible for gallantry

The scheme is being rolled out so that armed forces draw the best talents, he said, adding that Agnipath would add strength to the armed forces.

Top officials of the three services announced a detailed schedule of the recruitment process, asserting that there will be no compromise on the quality of the training to be imparted to the 'Agniveers', though its duration would be compressed.

"The combat capabilities and retain 25 per cent of them for 15 more readiness of the Indian Air Force are Lt Gen Ponappa said the online registraand the government will do everything that is required to keep us combatworthy and combat-ready," Air Officerin-Charge of Personnel Air Marshal S K Iha said.

He said there is "absolutely no change" in the IAF's process of induction, entry-level qualification, examination syllabus and medical standards for the recruits under the Agnipath scheme "All the enrollments in the Indian Air Force will take place only through Agniveer Vayu," he said.

Army's Adjutant General Lt Gen Bansi Ponappa said the Army would induct women under the Agnipath scheme for induction as military police. He said the scheme will not dent but improve the Army's combat capabilities.

Kashmiri Saffron Gains More Prominence In Domestic, Export Markets With GI Tag

Observer News Service

Srinagar: To give a boost to saffron production in Kashmir, J&K Government has launched new initiatives including the introduction of GI Tagging.

GI sign is used on products that have a specific geographical origin and possess qualities or a reputation that are due to that origin.

Saffron growers are hopeful that they will now get a better price for their produce after the introduction of GI tag to the saffron grown here. Kashmiri Saffron is grown at an altitude of 1,600 m to 1,800 m above mean sea level, which adds to its uniqueness and differentiates it from other saffron varieties available across the world.

Saffron is cultivated and harvested in the Karewas (highlands) of Jammu and Kashmir and has been assigned Geographical Indication (GI) tag by the Geographical Indications Registry. The spice is grown in Pulwama, Budgam, Kishtwar and Srinagar regions of Jammu & Kashmir.

Iran is the largest producer of saffron in the world and India is a close competitor. However, with the GI tag of Kashmir saffron, India becomes the only Saffron producing Country for which GI has been assigned which will result in more prominence in the export market thereby boosting exports as well as help the farmers to get best remunerative price for economic sustainability.

The GI Certification would also cease the prevalent adulteration of Saffron and will put an end to the marketing of Saffron cultivated in other countries under the garb of being produced in Kashmir which otherwise was defeating the economic interests of the farmers associated with this crop.

Highlighting the importance of preserving the unique identity of Kashmiri Saffron, an official of Agriculture Department said that Kashmir is having a distinction of producing one of the best saffron in the world, therefore it is our individual/collective and moral responsibility to preserve this golden spice not only for a large number of families directly associated with the cultivation of saffron but for our generations to come.

Saffron, despite its price, is in high demand for its antioxidant properties. It carries a hefty price tag also because the process of converting crocus flowers into the thread-like spice is painstaking and labour-intensive as it takes around 160,000 flowers to yield a kilogram of saffron.

Kashmiri saffron is of superior quality because of the higher concentration of crocin, a carotenoid pigment that gives saffron its colour and medicinal value. Its crocin content is 8.72% compared to the Iranian variant's 6.82%, , giving it a darker colour and enhanced medicinal value.

Kashmiri Saffron is renowned globally as a spice. It rejuvenates health and is used in cosmetics and for medicinal purposes. It has been associated with traditional Kashmiri cuisine and represents the rich cultural heritage of the region. The unique characteristics of Kashmir saffron are its longer and thicker stigmas, natural deep-red colour, high aroma, bitter flavour, chemical-free processing, and high quantity of crocin (colouring strength), safranal (flavour) and picrocrocin (bitterness).

Remarkably, a new saffron park has been started just for the sole purpose of processing and promoting the sale of saffron from Kashmir Valley. The samples brought by growers are tested here. The lab is recognised across the world. There are 8 parameters that are tested, which are internationally recognized. The 8 parameters include moisture, extraneous matter and foreign matter, and total ash and three main characteristics. They are graded and then e-auctioned. The farmers get the flowers and then the stigma separation and vacuum drying is done at the Dusoo Park.

Traditionally the farmers used to dry the saffron under shade at home but due to that, the saffron used to lose the main components. Now all the parameters are saved to get the best grade, an official of the Saffron Park said.

With the GI tag, saffron growers and traders are getting more benefits like legal protection to the products as well as prevention of unauthorized use of GI tag products by others.

Djokovic, Swiatek Top Seeds At Wimbledon

Reuters

LONDON: Wimbledon champion Novak Djokovic will head into next week's tournament as the men's top seed with Russian world number one Daniil Medvedev banned from taking part while Germany's second-ranked Alexander Zverev is out injured.

Organisers of the grasscourt Grand Slam have banned players from Russia and Belarus from playing at this year's Wimbledon following Moscow's invasion of Ukraine, which Russia calls a 'special operation'.

Zverev had surgery on torn ligaments in his right ankle this month after he was forced to retire from his French Open semifinal against Rafael Nadal. Djokovic, who was unable to defend his 2021 Australian Open title and the 2,000 ranking points he earned due to his nonvaccinated status against CO-VID-19, recently lost his world number one spot to Medvedev.

The Serbian, who has won the last three editions of the grasscourt major, will slip further down the rankings after Wimbledon as he will lose another 2,000 points with the ATP and WTA stripping the tournament of points.

The absence of Medvedev and Zverev means Nadal, who is to determine the seedings but endar year Slam after winning mirror the world rankings.

It also results in Djokovic and Nadal finding themselves in different halves of the draw and they cannot face each other until the men's final on July 10. The duo met in this year's Roland Garros quarter-final where the Spaniard triumphed.

Britain has two players in the top 10 seeds at their home major with Cameron Norrie ninth while US Open champion Emma Raducanu is 10th in the absence of Belarussian Aryna Sabalenka. Poland's world number one Iga Swiatek will be the women's top seed with Estonian Annett Kontaveit the number two.

Rugby League Bans Transgender Athletes In Women's Sport

MELBOURNE/SYDNEY: Rugby banned transgender players from women's international competition on Tuesday until further notice, following global swimming's decision to restrict trans athletes' participation at the elite level. The International Rugby League (IRL) said it needed to further consult and in top women's competitions, balance transgender participa- including rugby union, cycling, other players.

"Until further research is completed to enable the IRL to implement a formal transgender inclusion policy, male-to-female the grounds of a perceived unfair (trans women) players are unable to play in sanctioned women's international rugby league matches," the IRL said in a statement. The ban, which comes after FINA voted on Sunday to restrict transgender athletes in elite women's swimming, was FIFA said it is in a consultation condemned by transgender advocates and sportspeople.

"It's disappointing. We're human beings the same as everyone else," transgender woman Caroline Layt, who played elite women's rugby league in Australia after transitioning, told Reuters. "It just tells trans kids and trans adults that you're not worthy. Don't even bother. Don't even bother showing up. What's the point?"

Other sports have policies restricting transgender athletes and Australian Rules football. The International Olympic Committee, however, said in November that no athlete should be excluded from the competition on advantage while leaving it up to sports federations to decide.
