After Imported Apples, Now Chinese Walnuts Eating Kashmiri Crop Market

Auqib Javeed

Srinagar: Amid the ongoing anguish over the duty free Iranian apples in Indian markets, the walnut growers of Kashmir now fear to lose their margins to the imported walnuts from the US, Chile and especially China.

The market flooding of these imported walnuts has created concerns at a time when the Kashmiri growers are harvesting the crop.

Bahadur Khan, President of the Dry Fruit Association of Kashmir told Kashmir Observer that even if the government of India has levied import duty on shipments from Chile and other countries, it has still outclassed the Kashmiri walnuts.

"Five years ago we used to send over a thousand trucks of walnuts from the valley. However, this year we have sent only 500-600 trucks to different parts of the country," Khan said. He cited the quality of walnuts from other countries as a major reason for low demand of Kashmiri walnuts in the markets. "The growers are anxious as the government is not serious in addressing the issues," Khan alleged. Government figures suggest the production of these walnuts is decreasing every year.

In the year 2017-18, 2.75 lakh metric tons of walnuts

2021-2022. It may be noted, the walnuts from Kashmiri would be in good demand in both domestic and international markets, however Khan said they are now struggling to export the product in other parts of the world.

"Government has levied 5 percent of Goods and Services Tax (GST) on our products which dented our export service," Khan told Kashmir Observer. According to Jan Mohammmad, another trader from North Kashmir's Baramulla district the production of the walnuts has considerably decreased this year due to "climate change"

"Unseasonal rainfall and a spike in temperature has hit the production. Even the walnuts we harvested are laying in Mandies as the demand is low," Jan Mohammad told Kashmir Observer.

Navy Revives Training Centre At Manasbal After 33 Yrs

Press Trust Of India

Manasbal: The Indian Navy has revived its training area at the Manasbal lake in Jammu and Kashmir's Ganderbal district, 33 years after it was closed following the eruption of militancy in the erstwhile state.

The facility at the Manasbal lake in the central Kashmir district was excellent for the naval training of the National Cadet Corps (NCC) in Jammu and Kashmir. However, due to the deterioration of the security situation, the site had to be abandoned in 1989 and the training areas were shifted to the Mansar Lake in Jammu, officials said.

With the improvement in the security situation in Kashmir, the naval training area has been successfully revived after a gap of 33 years, they said.

The officials said that a suit-able camping site along with adequate infrastructure has been provided by the Manasbal Development Authority on the lakefront and two naval training boats have been shifted here from Mansar.

Speaking to reporters at the training centre, Group Commander NCC Group Srinagar Brigadier K S Kalsi said it is a momentous occasion and a red-letter day for the NCC in the Kashmir valley.

"It is after a gap of 33 years that NCC training activities of the naval wing are restarting in this beautiful location of Manasbal lake... 100 NCC cadets including girls from various colleges of Jammu and Kashmir are participating in he camp," Brigadier Kalsi said He said the NCC is a major organ of nation-building. How Fake Science Websites Hijack Our Trust In Experts To Misinform And Confuse

The Conversation

The scientific method is rigorous. Claims and premises are supported with evidence. The peer review system is designed to ensure that research is scrutinised by experts before publication. And whenever researchers lack certainty, they'll emphasise that further research is necessary to land on the truth.

Unfortunately, fake science websites are learning to appear equally rigorous in order to trick their audiences into believing fringe, debunked and bogus theories. These websites seek to take advantage of our trust in experts, and the methods we use to verify information, to lend authority to anti-science positions.

Some even hyperlink to fake science published in what appear to be peerreviewed journals but are in fact open access publishers who will accept anything submitted, provided their fees are paid.

Research shows that the anti-science movement is escalating and globalising. In a recent global survey, almost 50 per cent of respondents said they see false or misleading information online every day. Over half of those who shared such information did so because they thought it was true at the time.

Fake science that masquerades as trustworthy and authoritative information is harder to spot. But by understanding the methods fake science websites are using, we can adjust our verification techniques to ensure we don't fall for their deception.

Fake science websites use extensive hyperlinking to facilitate the appearance of trustworthiness. Hyperlinks act as visual markers of credibility, appearing to connect content to a source. The mere presence of a link can provide readers with a sense that a particular claim is verified and that the author has done their research.

You'll know from your own browsing that checking every hyperlink to read and evaluate the information cited requires effort. For those who are not well-versed in scientific principles, methodology and analytical techniques, it is even more demanding. For convenience, we often trust the presence of a link or citation as proof that the information expressed is credible.

Repeated posts also add to the appearance of credibility. Research has found that virtually any claim uttered by a contrarian scientist, whether it challenges the consensus on anthropogenic climate change or calls into question individual scientists, immediately gets picked up and shared through the climate change blogosphere.

This content is copied from one site to another until dozens of websites feature the same information. The aim is not only to increase the content's visibility, but also to ensure search engine results pages are populated with the same repeated content.

Readers who attempt to verify information through lateral reading, or opening a series of tabs to read a selection of different articles, may come across several pages of results that appear to corroborate what they read on a single fake science website. Globally, 24 per cent of people use this verification technique. Fake science articles also hyperlink to this repeated content, increasing the likelihood that readers will see it as legitimate.

Many fake science websites never actually produce any original articles. They regurgitate anything that supports their position in order to make that position more visible, hoping that web users won't have time to figure out that a single article has been copied dozens of times.

Research shows that the anti-science movement is escalating and globalising. In a recent global survey, almost 50 per cent of respondents said they see false or misleading information online every day. Over half of those who shared such information did so because they thought it was true at the time.

The manufacturing of doubt is another common strategy used across many anti-science positions. Research has shown that the tobacco industry engaged with this strategy to cast doubt on links between smoking and cancer. The same strategy is now used to downplay the climate crisis.

Due to the sheer weight of scientific evidence of anthropogenic global warming, fake science websites avoid outright climate denial and instead critique climate concerns as overblown and climate policies as extreme. The objective is not to invalidate the position but to foster doubt about the reality of climate change.

To this end, articles again create the illusion of scientific rigour by referring to a selected body of evidence which is often misinterpreted or not peerreviewed. Meanwhile, research that confirms the severity of the climate crisis is labelled climate alarmism and dismissed as doom mongering.

Fake science websites aggressively share their articles, encouraging web users to do the same, so it's likely that they will appear in your social media or search engine feed. They're easy to spot if you know what to look out for. First, check the hyperlinks used in the article. Fake science websites will direct you to websites that aren't reputable, to websites that aren't relevant, or to articles identical to the one you're reading.

can also copy and paste part of a suspect article into a search engine to check how often it has been reposted. Genuine science and research is reposted on reputable websites, but fake science will be copied among a series of websites you've never heard of.

If you're still in doubt about an article's legitimacy, visit a website that is dedicated to unpacking misinformation and bias, such as mediabiasfactcheck. com, where you can check if a website is known to feature fake science.

Ultimately, fake science websites can only assume the appearance of credibility. They're hoping that web users won't have the time or the skills to discover that what they're reading lacks scientific proof. With that in mind, digging a little deeper can help us expose sham science from legitimate, expert sources.

Exhibition On Arbaeen Kicks Off At Mahattas

Syed Mohammad Burhan

Srinagar: A week long Exhibition on Arbaeen has kicked off at Mahatta Art Gallery near the city Centre. The Art, Photography and Calligraphy exhibition has attracted the attention of Art lovers who thronged the exhibition on Wednesday, the first day.

It is pertinent to mention, Arbaeen, is an Arabic word which translates to the "forty" day mourning period after Ashura (10th Muharram) when Imam Hussain (A.S) grandson of the Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) was martyred after having refused to pledge allegiance to the corrupt and tyrannical ruler, Yazid. The organizer of the event, Ilvas Rizvi said the exhibition has been named Mashq-e-Arbaeen as it coincides with Arbaeen.

"It has been organized to pay tributes to the martyrs of Karbala and remember their sacrifices they made for the sake of humanity. Imam Hussain unites every race, community and tributes to work for the welfare of humanity", Ilyas said.

Ilyas says his journey with holding exhibitions started a decade back in 2012 when he was pursuing a French language learning course at the University of Kashmir.

"Back in 2012, I along with some people decided to start a creative exhibition on Muharram. The first exhibition we hosted was in the lawns of Iqbal Library in 2013.

"Since then we have been doing regular workshops and today we have almost around 15 Artists participating in the event" he said. The Arbaeen exhibition hosts paintings, calligraphic works and a collection of archived photographs dating back decades. 'We have displayed a collection of photographs which take us back to the 1950's and 1960's. Photographs of Muharram processions passing through Jamia Masjid, Malkhah and Hassanabad localities of the old city are also on display"

"These pictures take us back to the old times and us a glimpse of our past'

Another feature of the event are the Art and Calligraphic works which are on display at the Mahattas. Artists have blended fine Art with Calligraphy to pay tributes to the Karbala martyrs.

Mohammad Afzal, a pass out of Jammu and Kashmir Academy of Art, Culture and Languages have been doing calligraphic works since years.

He developed interest towards calligraphy through an Urdu magazine. He says he could not miss the opportunity of showcasing his work at the Mahattas.

"Earlier, I was self-taught but later I pursued a three year calligraphic course and tried to get expertise from my mentors" Afzal said.

"My calligraphic work revolves around the saving the Prophet Muhammad (PBHU) and quotes of different poets". Through my calligraphic works, I want to present the Prophetic quotations in the best possible way

Afzal hopes to find customers for his calligraphic works at the exhibition.

The event also hosts works of small children who have tried to depict their experiences about Ashura. Arbaeen and the Karbala massacre.

The exhibition is supported by Edraak, a movement that aims at educational revival through arts and aesthetics in Kashmir and Mahatta Studios. The exhibition will be held till 21st September, 2022.

upwara: Police have launched a manhunt to nab a Kup¬wara villager accused of killing his wife. Though he has not left behind any clue, his arrest was expected by this eve¬ning, reports said. The gruesome murder has taken place at Surmarg, 15 km from Handwara in the border district.

According to the senior superintendent of police (SSP), Kupwara, J B Singh, Jawahira was married to one Nazir Ahmad Bhat of the village about six years ago from whom she has a child. But their relations became strained about six months ago. The dispute between the couple had even landed in a court of law, according to reports.

Singh said Bhat had apparently mended fences with his estranged wife about five days ago. However, during the night he allegedly killed her. After that, Bhat packed the body of his slain wife in a trunk and hid it in a room of his house. He is believed to have fled from his home immedi-ately after commission of the crime

It was only after some foul smell started emanating from the house that Bhat's neighbours became suspicious. Soon they informed the police who recovered the highly decom-posed body of the woman from the house he meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Or-ganization (SCO) in Samarkand, is beginning today with expectations of a political breakthrough not only between India and China but also between India and Pakistan. The latter relationship is drawing more attention after India and China more or less resolved their stand-off along the Line of Actual Control. Is there a chance that Prime Minister Narendra Modi and his Pakistani counterpart Shahbaz Sharif will meet? There is no confirmation on this so far.

Earlier last month, Pakistan foreign minister Bilawal Bhutto said that there were no plans for any meeting between Indian and Pakistani Prime Ministers on the sidelines of the SCO summit. He, however, made it clear that Pakistan has no option but to get used to living with India as no one can change their neighbours, mouthing a line made famous earlier by the former prime minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee. Bilawal, however, didn't make clear what living with India for Pakistan meant. For Vajpayee, this became a rationale for instituting one of the most durable dialogue processes with the then Pakistan president Pervez Musharraf that nearly pulled off a Kashmir solution.

However, there is a lot that has happened since then. The dynamics that had made the engagement possible then no longer obtain. After revocation of Article 370 in August 2019, the complexion of the Kashmir issue has changed beyond recognition. Several new factors are at play in the regional geo-politics and in the relations between the two countries that have made it increasingly difficult to go back to the formula. New Delhi has also taken Kashmir off the table in future discussions with Pakistan, considering the issue settled once and for all. The only issues that New Delhi wants to discuss now are terrorism and the return of Pakistan-controlled Kashmir. The refrain in India is that it desires normal neighbourly relations with Islamabad in an environment free of terror, hostility, and violence.

But Pakistan wants to only discuss Kashmir and also seeks a reversal of the withdrawal of Article 370 which is not going to happen. The positions of the two countries have thus become too irreconcilable to make it easy for them to re-engage. But it is still possible that PM Modi and Sharif meet and break ice. In the interest of regional peace, the two neighbours need to transcend their differences and talk to each other. This alone will change the situation in the region for the better.

What's in Blue Denims Fakeness, Hybridity or Authenticity?

Is Westernization, broadly or narrowly defined, the 'end game' for non -Western cultures and societies? Can this be inferred from how people speak and dress? What would against the backdrop of conflicting ideas about culture, desire, ambition, outlook and so on authenticity mean? Would it be 'pure' Westernization or 'pure' nativism'?

wo incidents with me, one today, and the other years ago in Australia illustrate truths, to some extent, that might define the contemporary cultural world. Today's incident first. The moment I stepped out of the interior of an uptown Srinagar café, a boy (or a young adult), one in a gaggle of boys and girls reflexively asked me for the bill. I was wearing a Shalwar Kameez. Startled, I politely told him I was not a waiter. He and his friend(s) apologized for the 'confusion'. Now back to the past: when I was in my intense wandering stage in Australia, and when I'd go for the Friday prayers to the Mosque, after a conversation with me, white Australian converts would say, 'he's like us'. (Now with respect to me, I would like to think that I am a bit of a hybrid who has imbibed reasonably well both elements of 'reason' and my cultural and even religious moorings and underpinnings- an enriching synthesis that allows me to negotiate different worlds). But what explains today's experience of mine and the Oz converts assessment of me? If an insight can be culled from today's experience, and from it(experience) can be abstracted the general tenor of cultural life among contemporary youth in the non- western world, it may be two-fold. One is that the West sets cultural (fashion, English as the lingua franca or a general way of being) standards across the world. The corollary here is that the young of non -western cultures against Western cultural standards suffer from an acute inferiority complex. Western standards- validated and reinforced by Instagram, Facebook etc- are the ones to follow or imitate for them and native ones bespeak and reflect something sub -par. What can be inferred from this? Some may state that this is Westernization or a modern outlook. But this would be an ironically superficial assessment? While the way one comports oneself, speaks and so on, and it might constitute a compliment for the culture that one is imitating, but abstracting an outlook from this would be wrong. Outlook and how one sees the world is a complex phenomenon that emanates from intellectual development, growth and nuance emanating from one's given experience or 'habitus', among other things. Blue Denims- a western 'thing' - and wearing these cannot be a proxy for this. Outlook, of any kind or of any culture, is philosophical. Blue denims are 'what everyone wears' - or in other words superficial. The latter is a reflection of a sartorial code in a given context; it neither is determinative of behavior nor culture.

Now, let me turn to the Oz anecdote: Why would Oz converts think I was 'like them'? One reason may have been the way I spoke- non accented , clearly enunciated English, unlike other immigrants. The other could have been my tentative and putative knowledge of their culture and to some extent western philosophy. They could, in other words, relate to me. But was I necessarily 'like them'? No. I shared some similarities with them but I was not Aus- reason, emotion, and culturemay be most prudent. This is not for purely or merely instrumental terms- career advancement, social or economic mobility, international experiences and so on- but for the general wellbeing of societies and cultures. Homogeneity where everyone eats burgers and Pizzas and drinks Coca Cola would be a boring, drab world. But I would dare say, there might not be anything wrong with drinking a Coca Cola while wearing a Shalwar Kameez (or whatever one's cultural dress code might be) and reading Sartre or whatever one's cultural, religious or literary texts are. From a larger canvas, there's no such thing as pure authenticity, 'pure' hybridity' or 'pure' fakeness. There is , in the human makeup elements of all. It's then either pick and choose one's preference (where the element of choice kicks in) or a deeper, profounder preference of who you want to be. Either is he Congress's Bharat Jodo Yatra has, unsurpris-ingly, led to much political sabre-rattling. The Bharatiya Janata Party has not lost an opportunity to needle its rivals on a number of irrelevant issues. ranging from Rahul Gandhi's sartorial tastes to describing the exercise as yet another endeavour to save the Congress's First Family. Curiously, there has been some heartburn over the vatra from within the Congress rank and file too. Some have wondered about the prudence of prioritising an ostensibly apolitical engagement at a time when crucial assembly elections are on the radar. This line of thinking argues that the party should have devoted its energy and resources in preparing for these polls next year.

OTHER OPINON

The leitmotif of the Bharat Jodo Yatra is reform. The Congress is hoping that the march — the yatra is expected to cover 3,500 kilometres across 12 states in five months would help the party resurrect some of the foundational values of the republic in the public consciousness. There is no doubt that this is the need of the hour. The political ascendancy of the Bharatiya Janata Party has coincided with unprecedented pressure on fraternity, federalism, pluralism, inclusion — the building bricks of Indian democracy. Mobilising collective support for these could change — reform? — the prevailing public mood that is enchanted with the divisive message of Hindutva. There could be a collateral gain in the process: the reformation of a moribund Congress. That the party has lost its mass appeal has been borne out by a series of electoral debacles. An enthusiastic public response to the yatra, especially in northern India where the Congress is now a marginal force, could breathe life into the party and its fractious leadership. There is a third aspect about the yatra that is not being discussed adequately. The campaign, if successful, could alter the way in which political parties perceive traditional modes of mobilisation. The increasing use of social media by politicians as a means of communication in the digital age has led to politicians and parties shunning the long march as an effective strategy to rally the people. Yet, yatras have had a long and illustrious history. M.K. Gandhi in subjugated India, or L.K. Advani, in liberated India, made capital use of journeys across the nation to build opinion. The Bharat Jodo Yatra could build bridges to close the communication gap.

egendary film director Jean-Luc Godard, who passed away a couple of days ago at the age of 91, ushered in a revolution in French cinema. It was Godard who unearthed the talent and brilliance of the renowned Hollywood directors, Alfred Hitchcock

India Is Quietly Laying Claim To Economic Superpower Status

India Recently Overtook UK As The World's Fifth Biggest Economy - And It Could Be Third By 2030

he rise of China has been the biggest story in the global economy in recent decades. But amid concern about its stumbling property market and global fears about inflation, the emergence of its neighbour, India, as a potential new economic superpower may be going under the radar.

You won't find mention of it in Liz Truss's blueprint for a "modern brilliant Britain", but the UK has just been overtaken by India as the world's fifth biggest economy. The nation of 1.4 billion people is on track to move into third place behind the US and China by 2030, according to economists.

And while the world became familiar with Chinese business titans such as Alibaba founder Jack Ma, the staggering wealth accumulated in recent years by Indian billionaires Gautam Adani and Mukesh Ambani has been less well publicised.

Adani, in particular, has come to represent India's growing economic strength thanks to the rapid expansion of his Adani Group conglomerate, which covers everything from ports to airports, and solar power to television. Having entered the global Top 10 when he became Asia's richest person in February, he is now ranked third with a fortune of $143bn (£123bn) and is closing fast on second-placed Amazon boss Jeff Bezos.

India was for many years seen as the poor relation to China, held back by a sclerotic, sprawling state sector and labyrinthine bureaucracy. It still has enormous problems of poverty and poor infrastructure, but it is beginning to emerge as a rival to its large neighbour with the kind of economic growth figures that were once the pride of Beijing.

Gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 13.8% in the second quarter of this year as pandemic controls were lifted and manufacturing and services boomed. Although doubledigit growth is unlikely to be repeated in subsequent quarters, India is still on track to expand by 7% this year as it benefits from economic liberalisation in the private sector, a rapidly growing working population, and the realignment of global supply chains away from China.

"India has overtaken the UK to become the world's fifth-largest economy," says Shilan Shah, senior India economist at the consultancy Capital Economics, citing recent updated figures from the International Monetary Fund. "Looking ahead, India looks set to continue its march up the global rankings. In all, we think India will overtake Germany and Japan to become the third-largest economy in the world within the next decade."

A key part of India's continued rise will be its ability to grow its manufacturing sector and challenge China as the world's No 1 exporter. India has already benefited from a large, well-educated, often Englishspeaking middle-class, helping the country to develop world-class IT and pharmaceutical sectors. It also has strong consumer demand, which accounts for about 55% of the economy compared with less than 40% in China.

Now the trick will be to benefit from its youthful working populaIndia was for many years seen as the poor relation to China, held back by a sclerotic, sprawling state sector and labyrinthine bureaucracy. It still has enormous problems of poverty and poor infrastructure, but it is beginning to emerge as a rival to its large neighbour with the kind of economic growth figures that were once the pride of Beijing tion to position itself as a manufacturing power to rival China, where an ageing labour force and rising pay levels are reducing its competitive edge. With a geopolitical wedge opening up between China and the west, India also has the opportunity to grow in reshaped international supply chains.

Nguyen Trinh, emerging markets economist at Natixis bank in Hong Kong, says the outlook is promising for India if it can keep investing.

"Indian demand is expected to be strong due to its demographics," she says, "which is rather favourable with rising working-age population that will push for demand for essentials such as food and energy as well as infrastructure investment. The normalisation of activities post-Covid as well as an increase in government spending, particularly in infrastructure investment, is helping growth. Consumption rose in double digits and investment is accelerating."

As with many aspects of India's economic rise, Adani's story is instructive. Now 60, the billionaire dropped out of Gujarat University, moved to Mumbai, and began trading diamonds before expanding into ports, construction and – latterly, but very profitably – renewable energy.

These widespread industrial interests have dovetailed perfectly with the country's thirst for growth and seen his Adani Group holdings on the Indian stock market rocket in value. His main listed company, Adani Enterprises, has grown 50-fold in value in the past five years, while Adani Green Energy, which looks after its push into solar power, has doubled in value in the past year. The group is ploughing $70bn into green energy projects by 2030 with the aim of becoming the world's largest renewable-energy producer - ironic given the controversy over its plans to expand coal mining in Australia.

Another important symmetry comes from Adani's origins in the western state of Gujarat, which is also the power base of the Indian prime minister, Narendra Modi. Modi's market reforms, which have included cutting corporation tax from 35% to 25% and opening up India to more foreign investment, have freed up entrepreneurs such as Adani and the man he overtook as the country's richest person, Mukesh Ambani, head of Reliance Industries, and another Gujarati. Adani is close to Modi who has been known to use the tycoon's private jet for campaign trips. Nowhere is the local and global ambition of Adani more clearly illustrated than in Mundra, the Arabian Sea port which he wants to become the world's largest by the end of the decade. With Modi's government rolling out a 100tn rupees ($1.35tn, £1.1tn) infrastructure programme - it aims to build 25,000km of new roads in the current financial year alone – Adani is well placed to profit at every stage as the necessary raw materials are shipped in, turned into goods and services, and then sent back out around the world through Mundra.

How Living In A Pandemic Distorts Our Sense Of Time

ime hasn't made much sense since spring 2020 for many people, myself included. In February 2020, during the Before Times, my family traveled to Barcelona, a relatively carefree trip that now feels like a lifetime ago. Other times, I feel like I blinked, and three years vanished. How can my son be starting fifth grade? He was a second grader just a minute ago.

Welcome to "blursday." Back when the pandemic started, the term hit the zeitgeist. The word captured that sense of time disintegrating as our worlds and routines turned upside down (SN: 9/14/20). Days melted together, then weeks, then years.

As people began wondering about why time felt so out of whack, Simon Grondin, a psychologist at Laval University in Quebec City, and colleagues penned a theory paper seeking to explain the phenomenon. Our time is typically punctuated by events, such as dinner dates or daily commutes, Grondin and his team wrote in October 2020 in Frontiers in Psychology. Such events provide temporal landmarks. When those landmarks disappear, days lose their identities. Time loses its definition.

Since the initial shutdowns, cognitive neuroscientists and psychologists have been scrambling to document people's changing relationship with the clock. Early findings from those efforts now confirm that the pandemic did lead many people worldwide to experience distortions in their perception of time.

For instance, two surveys of more than 5,600 people taken during the first six months of the pandemic in the United States showed that roughly two-thirds of respondents reported feeling strangely out of sync. Days felt as if they were blurring together, the present loomed overly large and the future felt uncertain, researchers reported in August in Psychological Trauma: Theory, Research, Practice and Policy.

"All of a sudden everything went on stop.... We could not be the people we were used to being in the world anymore," says health psychologist Alison Holman of the University of California, Irvine.

For some people, distortions in time may feel like a strange, somewhat unsettling phenomenon, but one they can shake off. For others, the trauma of the past few years combined with this weird perception of time is a worrisome mix: They could be at risk of lingering mental health problems, Holman says.

Those who reported greater feelings of time distortion, and thus may be at higher risk of developing mental health problems, included participants ages 18 to 29 and women. Previous life experience, including preexisting mental health challenges and high levels of lifetime stress or trauma, also heightened one's likelihood of feeling out of sync.

Holman first observed how a warped sense of time can hurt people's well-being as a graduate student in the 1990s. For her dissertation, she interviewed survivors of the southern California fires of 1993 within days of the fires' onset. She found that two years later, the individuals who had lost their sense of time during the fires still reported feeling greater distress than those who had largely kept their temporal bearings.

"People who experienced temporal disintegration ... got stuck in that past experience. They couldn't put together the flow from past to present to future," she says.

Now Holman hopes that measuring how much people feel like time is falling apart during the pandemic might provide an early indicator of who might need help with recovery.

Other recent research during the pandemic suggests that those experiencing time as moving more slowly seem to struggle with greater mental distress than those who experience time as moving fast. For instance, respondents who reported that time felt like it was going very slowly also reported higher levels of loneliness, researchers reported in August in Nature Human Behaviour.

In a similar line of work, experimental psychologist Ruth Ogden of Liverpool John Moores University in England and colleagues are seeking to understand how people might eventually remember the pandemic, and what that could mean for recovery. Ogden and her team asked almost 800 respondents in the United Kingdom to reflect on the start of the pandemic a year after it started.

Only 9 percent said the preceding 12 months felt precisely like a year, while 34 percent said that time felt shorter, the researchers wrote in July in PLOS One. Most respondents, 57 percent, said that the preceding 12 months felt longer than a year.

When a traumatic event feels long in hindsight, people may feel that the trauma is much closer in the rearview mirror than it is in reality. Such negative emotions could lengthen people's recovery from the pandemic, Ogden and her team suspect. Remembering "a longer pandemic may feel more recent and thus more present," the team writes.

Mindfulness training that brings people back to the present is one promising way to overcome distortions in time perception, says Olivier Bourdon, a psychologist at the University of Quebec in Montreal (SN: 9/26/22).

But unlike more finite traumas, such as wildfires and mass shootings, the pandemic is not yet in the rearview mirror. Many people are stuck not in the past but a sort of liminal present. While the answers for how to treat people in this instance are far from clear, Bourdon says the key is helping people knit together their past, present and future selves. "If you're stuck in a specific time perspective, it's bad for health," he says.

Helping people rebuild a new vision for the future is especially crucial for well-being, research suggests. People must, Holman says, "have some sense of tomorrow."

government figures, horticulture is a source of livelihood for 33 lac population. About seven lakh families are directly or indirectly involved and depend on this sector.

The UT has been declared as an Agri Export Zone for Apples and Walnut. The total area under dry fruit cultivation is 51,576 hectares.

The growers produce three varieties of walnuts in the Valley, locally known as Wonth, Kagazi, and Burzul The Wonth is a hard nut to crack.

Most of the walnut trees in the Valley are centuries-old and the growers don't use any fertilisers for the trees. The trees grow to a height of 10-20 feet and the growers usually face causalities while harvesting.

The Valley witnesses a number of deaths and injuries every year during walnut harvest season. Most of the growers are from poor families.

North Kashmir's Kupwara is the largest walnut-growing region in Kashmir, while other districts that produce walnuts include Shopian, Baramulla, Budgam, Bandipora and Pulwama.

Khan told Kashmir Observer that even though the quality and quantity of the walnuts from other parts of the world is huge, the walnuts from Kashmir are organic and without any fertilisers.

He further added that only two varieties are being sold outside-Kagazi and Burzul while Wonth is being sold and eaten by locals.

High quality walnut (Kagazi, and Burzul) is being sold at Rs 250 per kilogram while the Wonth is being sold at Rs 40 per kilogram

Jan Mohammad said that the Kashmir Valley lacks space for dry fruits as a result the growers are not getting reasonable prices for the walnuts in the market.

"Unlike Apples, Walnuts don't have any Mandis in the Valley so that we could store our product and sell it on when the demand is high," Jan Mohammad added.

However, Khan said there is one Mandi in north Kashmir's Kupwara but they need more.

India's main walnut-producing state is Kashmir which accounts for 90% of the country's walnut production.

Ghulam Rasool Mir, Director Horticulture, Kashmir told Kashmir Observer that the government has taken several initiatives to help the walnut growers of the Valley.

"We are providing walnut nurseries with a subsidy of Rs 7 lakh," Mir said.

Acknowledging that in traditional walnut trees, the region is facing a lot of problems, Mohammad Amin, another official who is posted at the office of Director Horticulture; Srinagar said difficulties in harvesting and less production are the two main issues of traditional walnut trees

Amin said that the government has rolled-out the scheme of providing high-density walnut trees that produce crop within three years of its plantation.

"The farmers can grow 300 walnut trees per hectare instead of 100 trees per hectare with high-density walnut

Farooq Shah

SRINAGAR: While arguing that it is incorrect to associate any language with a specific faith, multiple speakers at the Hindi Divas celebratory function organized by the State Council of Education Research and Training (SCERT), Wednesday, emphasized the importance of learning more languages in order to communicate with a wider audience.

Hindi Divas is observed on September 14 every year to celebrate its popularity and mark its adoption in the Devanagari script as one of the official languages of India.

"Languages provide the strongest connection to other cultures and foster love for their customs, beliefs, arts, and history," Dr Shabnam, academic officer, who heads the "Education in Languages" wing of the SCERT said. "Learning multiple languages, especially those of the country, is something that people should do because it will help them communicate with language.

Associate Professor Fayaz Ahmad Fayaz echoed Dr. Shabnam's sentiments when he stated that learning the local language will make life easier. He cited an instance in which he got lost on Delhi road beа cause he couldn't understand the bus's signboard to illustrate the vastly increased reach that comes with learning new languages.

"We should learn Hindi with a more honest and open mindset because we live in India, where the bulk of the population speaks Hindi," Fayaz said. "Students should be encouraged to study Hindi because it is the country of India's national language." Later, some members of the SCERT faculty arranged a panel discussion and talked about the importance of learning Hindi without associating it with a particular faith. On this occasion, schoolchildren also displayed vibrant activities to encourage the study of the Hindi

Article 370 Did Not Obstruct J&K's Development: Azad

"It (Article 370) was not an obstacle. (As the chief minister of Jammu and Kashmir), I introduced a three-shift work system, Assembly sittings were held six days a week, roads were built, a network of schools and colleges was created and environment clearances were given," Azad told reporters here.

The former Union minister, who recently quit the Congress, said he had even countered Modi in Parliament on Article 370.

"I have countered the prime minister and the home minister in Parliament on this issue. I have highlighted 30 indices where Jammu and Kashmir under Article 370 outperformed the national average and 40 indices where it fared better than Gujarat.

"I had said in Parliament that since Jammu and Kashmir was better on most indices, Gujarat should instead be made a Union territory and a Lieutenant Governor be sent there," he added.

On the restoration of Article 370, Azad said he never ruled out its does not shed tears for anyone just possibility but was of the opinion that it could consume time.

"I have not said Article 370 cannot be restored. Either it will be restored by Modi, like he did with the (repeal of) farm laws as he has the majority, or there should be a two-third majority in Parliament. I cannot convince him or his cabinet on this," he said.

Azad said according to the details he received from Parliament, 86 per cent members in the Lok Sabha -- the BJP and eight other parties -- were in favour of the abrogation while 14 per cent were against it.

"Can any party from here (Jammu and Kashmir) get 86 per cent? We can pray that some day we get the two-third majority but it cannot be today, it cannot be in March Congress leader Rahul Gandhi.

The former chief minister of date has been given for hearing it. If proceedings start, how many years will it take and in whose favour will it be decided, we do not know.

"So, we will not come up with any slogan which is not fair, just and possible. I dont want to give any false hopes, whether people vote for us or not," he said.

Azad said while Article 370 deserves respect, there are other issues, too, which need to be corrected in terms of development and governance.

"We cannot sit idle till Article 370 is restored," he said.

On the allegation that he was playing second fiddle to the BJP in Jammu and Kashmir, Azad said it was not him but some leaders in the Congress who were helping the BJP in achieving a 'Congressmukt Bharat'.

"I am accused of being a friend of the BJP. The real friends of the BJP are those who are helping in establishing a Congress-mukt Bharat. This is my counter allegation on them," he said.

Azad said the Congress lead-ers were levelling the allegation against him as Prime Minister Narendra Modi got emotional during his farewell in Rajya Sabha.

"I must have done some good work...because this prime minister like that. Just run a search for my speeches in Parliament, and you will see the verbal exchnages I have had with the prime minister. Going by those speeches, Modi Sahib should have put me in jail, but he said he has seen all my documents during my tenure as the chief minister, he has seen my notes against corruption. That's (the corruption) what the BJP is tracking today," he said. Azad said the Congress could have encashed the fact that the prime minister cried for him.

"But what did you do? You keep abusing the prime minister 24 hours a day. The result is that you lost even your own seat. When you keep abusing someone, that person gets sympathy from the people," he said, without naming

Chhattisgarh Govt Probes Complaints Of Bonded Labour In J&K

Press Trust Of India

RAIPUR: The Chhattisgarh government on Wednesday sent a team of its officials, including an executive magistrate, to Jammu and Kashmir to examine the complaints about workers from the state being forced to work as "bonded" labourers at some brick kilns there, an official here said.

The three-member team comprises Nayab Tehsildar/Executive Magistrate Kishan Mishra, Labour Inspector L S Markam and Assistant Sub Inspector Lambodar Singh Banafar, he said.

There were complaints that people from Janjgir-Champa and Sakti districts, who had gone for work at brick kilns in Budgam district of Jammu and Kashmir, were working as bonded labourers, the state's public relations department official said in a statement.

Sakti was carved out from Janjgir-Champa to form a new district last week.

Taking cognisance of the complaints, the Janjgir-Champa district administration contacted its Budgam counterpart following which the latter swung into action, he said. A joint team of Budgam administration offiment was unearthed, he said.

However, on the direction of Chief Minister Bhupesh Baghel, the three member team was sent to Jammu and Kashmir for examining the complaints and taking necessary action accordingly, he said.

Earlier, The National Campaign Committee for Eradication of Bonded Labour (NCCEBL), an umbrella organisation of activists, had raised the issue and filed a complaint that 90 migrant and 'bonded' labourers from Chhattisgarh are stuck in the brick kiln at Mangepura in Budgam, said Nirmal Gorana, the convenor of the NCCEBL said in a statement on Wednesday. The stranded labourers include pregnant and lactating mothers who are refused with medical facilities by the contractors, he said.

Analysts See RBI Delivering Another 35-50 Bps Repo Hike On Sep 30

Press Trust Of India

MUMBAI: With the price index surprising on the upside in August, many analysts have pencilled in a higher inflation print in September as well and accordingly expect the central bank to frontload policy rate hikes, delivering another 35 bps later this month.

Confounding the worries on the inflation front, retail inflation accelerated to 7 per cent on-year in August from 6.7 per cent in the previous month -staying above the upper tolerance limit of the central bank for all the eight months of 2022. The higher than expected August inflation print was driven by food prices primarily in rural areas which came in at 7.2 per cent as against 6.7 per cent in urban areas.

The rate-setting panel has increased the policy reportate they expect a 35-bps rate hike in by 140 bps to 5.4 per cent since May with the last being a 50 bps increase in the August review. Yet real interest rates continue to be negative as inflation continues to stay above 6 per cent.

According to Tanvee Gupta-Jain, the India chief economist at the Swiss brokerage UBS Securities, considering the base effect, inflation print for September is also likely to remain elevated around the August levels before moderating meaningfully from October onwards.

This will have the RBI-led monetary policy committee front-loading the tightening cycle and deliver another 35 bps in the September 30 policy review.

For the full year FY23, the brokerage continues to expect retail inflation to average at 6.7 per cent.

Accordingly, she says in their base case, they continue to expect the monetary policy committee to front-load the rate hike cycle and raise the repo rate by another 35 bps in the September review.

In a note, Rahul Bajoria, the chief economist at Barclays Securities India, said elevated inflation on both the retail and wholesale fronts suggests the need for the RBI's monetary policy committee to maintain vigilance over evolving price trends and accordingly he expects the MPC to front-load rate hikes, and deliver another 50 bps rate hike on September 30.

On the positive side he notes that the gap between WPI and CPI is closing, it remains wide enough to keep the MPC on its path of front-loaded rate hikes. In a note, Morgan Stanley said the September 30 review as they expect CPI inflation to remain around 5.3 per cent in FY24 and thus believe that normalisation in real rates is warranted.

Even as the monsoon has been progressing well with cumulative rainfall 6 per cent above the long-term average up to September 12, the distribution of the rainfall has been rather uneven.

As a result the summer crop sowing declined by 1.3 per cent on-year up to September 2, largely led by paddy which declined by a negative 5.6 per cent and pulses (-4.4 per cent), UBS said. To control the domestic prices, the government last week banned exports of broken rice and imposed a 20 per cent duty on exports of various grades of rice.

According to her, another worry is that core inflation continues to remain sticky at 5.8 per cent (CPI ex food and fuel) in August, while fuel inflation decelerated to 5.2 per cent from 5.6 per cent in July.

NPS: Insurance Regulator Eases Rules For Pensioners

Press Trust Of India

NEW DELHI: Insurance regulator Irdai on Tuesday said it has done away with the requirement of submitting a separate form to buy annuity from NPS proceeds at the time of retirement.

Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority of India (Irdai) said it is aimed at providing ease of doing business in insurance industry and for protection of interests of policyholders. "In this direction, to bring ease of living for senior citizens, Irdai has relaxed the requirement of submitting separate proposal form for taking the immediate annuity products from proceeds of National Pension System (NPS)," Irdai said in a circular.

At present, NPS retirees have to submit an exit form to PFRDA and a proposal form to insurers at the time of superannuation. Now, the exit form of NPS will be treated as proposal form for purchasing annuity, thereby reducing the time and efforts of senior citizens as well as insurers, Irdai said. The Annuity Service Providers (ASPs) are insurance companies regulated by Irdai and empanelled by the PFRDA to provide the annuity to the NPS subscribers from the bouquet of annuities offered by them.

Rupee Falls 30 Paise To 79.47 Against US Dollar

Press Trust Of India

MUMBAI: The rupee declined by 30 paise to close at 79.47 (provisional) against the US dollar on Wednesday as higher-than-expected US CPI print resulted in risk-off sentiment among investors.

At the interbank foreign exchange market, the domestic currency opened at 79.58 per dollar. It hovered in a range of 79.38 to 79.60 during the session.

The domestic unit finally settled at 79.47, down 30 paise over its previous close of 79.17.

'The Indian rupee remained under pressure amid a broad-based gain in the dollar after much-awaited US inflation data came higher than expected," said Dilip Parmar, Research Analyst, HDFC Securities.

The dollar bided well after the rate market started pricing a full percentage point hike in the next week's Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting.

"However, recovery in domestic equities and corporate dollar supply gave support to the rupee after a weak opening," Parmar said, adding that in the near term, spot USDINR is expected to trade in the range of 79.65 to 78.70. Meanwhile, the dollar index, which gauges the greenback's strength against a basket of six currencies, was trading 0.35 per cent lower at 109.43.
